1908 BUICK, Model 10, was a fancy car that sold for around $900. It had a four-cylinder, eighteen-horsepower engine. A popular feature was the "mother-in-law seat."

TODAY AS YESTERDAY

CARS RUN THEIR BEST ON THE BEST GASOLINE

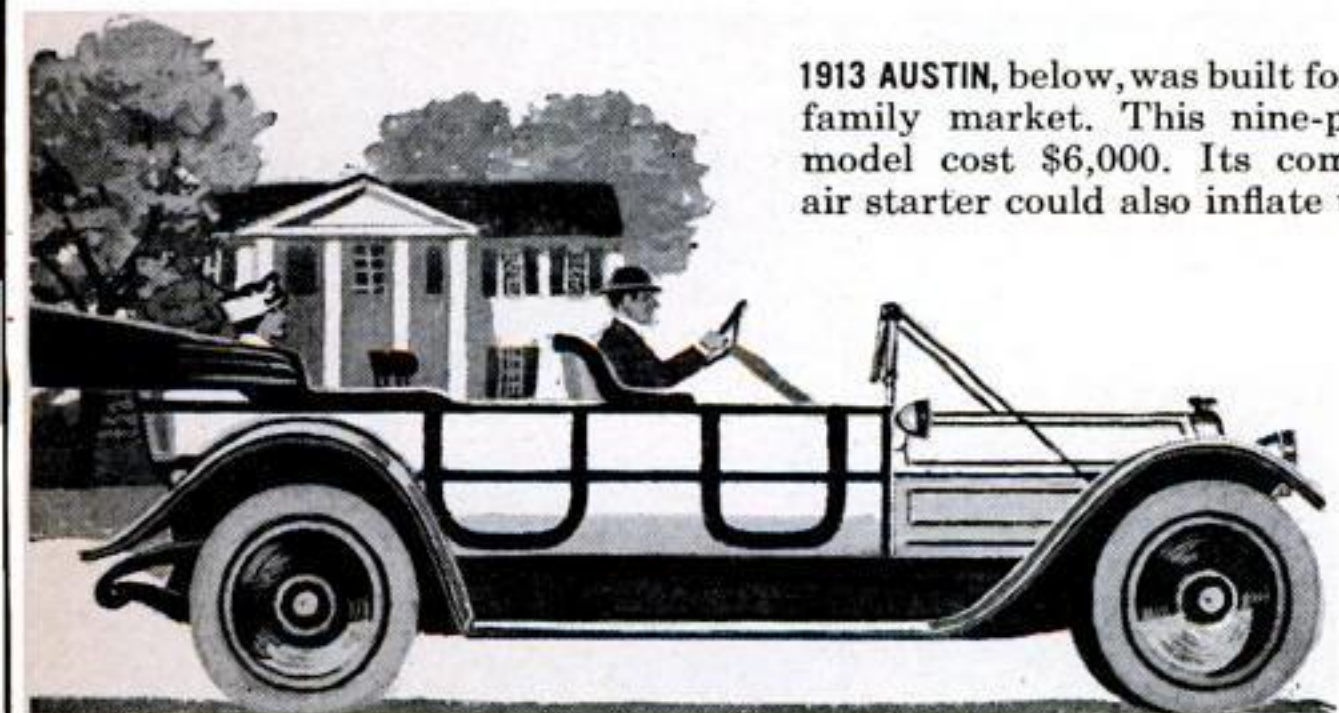

1952 BUICK Roadmaster, below, has the Fireball 8 engine that "makes the most of high compression." Dynaflo Drive and optional Power Steering make driving effortless.

With their polished leather seats and bright brass trim, yesterday's automobiles looked mighty good to their owners. But Grandpa will tell you they did not have enough power under the hood. That's one thing today's car owner isn't likely to complain about. The combination of a modern high compression engine and "Ethyl" gasoline gives plenty of power.

"Ethyl" gasoline is high octane gasoline. It helps modern high compression engines develop top power and efficiency. It's the gasoline you ought to buy. Remember, there's a powerful difference between gasoline and "Ethyl" gasoline.

1913 AUSTIN, below, was built for the big-family market. This nine-passenger model cost $6,000. Its compressed-air starter could also inflate the tires.

1931 DUESENBERG, at the right, carried the name of a famous racing-car designer. It was built in Indianapolis. The big, eight-cylinder engine developed 265 horsepower.

DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION

Sirs:

Thanks a million for good behind-the-scenes reporting on the Democratic Convention, namely, your pictures of labor bosses' strong-arm influence ("The Democrats Debate Loud in Zeal and Anger," LIFE, Aug. 4). The one of Senator Humphrey, Walter Reuther and Governor "Soapy" Williams is a doozy. All Americans should plant that photo firmly in their minds to remember on election day this November. . . .

Have the people decided that nothing can be done about collusion between labor bosses and key politicians?

A. G. PARKER

San Diego, Calif.

Sirs:

The dramatic photo of Senator Kefauver in his moment of defeat reflects the sensation of complete disillusionment experienced by his multitudinous and loyal supporters throughout the country.

ERNA G. CARROLL

Minneapolis, Minn.

Sirs:

President Truman stated that primaries were just a lot of eyewash. He must have known whereof he spoke. The people who made the special effort to vote in the primaries clearly indicated Senator Kefauver as their choice. The delegates disregarded their wishes. . . .

THELMA HAKKARAINEN

Sirs:

Just consider what a few less trips to the barber shop might do with a recalcitrant Whig vote in November. See my retouched cover of "Honest Abe" Stevenson (below).

E. B. SHAW

Sirs:

If the American people are too stupid, too calloused, too lacking in vision to heed the clarion call of this modern Isaiah, Adlai Stevenson, then we had best pour what is left of our civilization down the drain and give the ants a chance.

In your fine report you omitted the high point of the whole show. This was Senator Russell Long's politically dangerous act of defiance to the Dixiecrats during the hot fight over party loyalty. Get 5 times more active chlorophyll*

A chlorophyll toothpaste can do wonders—if it contains enough active chlorophyll. Chlorodent gives you up to 5 times more active chlorophyll!

VISIBLE PROOF!

Chlorodent tints your brush with the deep, rich green of chlorophyll itself. This proves that you are getting active chlorophyll—up to 5 times more! No other toothpaste gives you such dramatic proof.

GIVES YOU A

Clean Fresh Mouth All Day Long!

To have a clean, fresh mouth all day, insist on Chlorodent. No other dentifrice maker can use the Chlorodent active-chlorophyll formula, because it's patented (Pat. No. 2216816).

New freedom from MOUTH ODORS!

In hundreds of tests, Chlorodent stopped mouth odor for hours... far longer than white toothpaste. By using Chlorodent regularly—preferably after meals—you can be free of mouth odor all day!

Keeps teeth CLEANEST!

Leading dental scientists tested major dentifrices—chlorophyll, ammoniated and regular. Actual color photos proved that Chlorodent's cleansing agent was the most effective!

Half of all tooth losses caused by GUM TROUBLES!

It pays to remember that Chlorodent promotes the growth of firm, healthy-pink tissue. If you have tender gums, you will want to see your dentist and use Chlorodent for its fast relief of this condition.

Fights TOOTH DECAY!

Chlorodent reduces the amount of mouth acids formed that "eat" into tooth enamel... and the bacteria which cause them. And Chlorodent keeps teeth so clean that bacteria find it difficult to multiply. No other toothpaste offers better protection.

No other toothpaste can give you all these benefits. So, insist on Chlorodent! Buy a tube today.

In tooth powder, too! You can get the miracle benefits of Chlorodent also in tooth powder. Cool, fresh flavor. Ask for Chlorodent Chlorophyll Tooth Powder today.

*Water-soluble chlorophyllins

UNCONDITIONAL GUARANTEE

We think you'll find Chlorodent the finest dentifrice you ever used. If you don't agree, return unused portion to Lever Brothers Company, New York. We'll refund purchase price plus postage!

METERED MARE

Sirs:

The amusing photo of the mare hitched to a parking meter (LIFE, Aug. 4) struck a familiar note (below). At first it may look as if rickshas are abroad in our streets and their coolies are dutifully obeying regulations. Actually here's what happened.

The vehicle is one of thousands made by the carriage firm of James H. Birch which went out of business 35 years ago. It was assembled for exhibit at Burlington's 275th Anniversary celebration, Sept. 27 to Oct. 4.

I went out with my camera to get a shot of the odd vehicle. A shirtless local lad looked so much like a genuine coolie in his floppy straw hat that I snapped his picture while he was playing with the parking meter.

IVANHOE

There are a hundred Hollywoods today . . . in distant jungles, on tropic isles, in far-off ports of call. More than ever, troupes of stars and technical crews travel thousands of miles to capture a story on its actual locale. Thus, M-G-M's cameras roved to Africa for "King Solomon's Mines", to Rome for "Quo Vadis", and now to England for one of the world's best-loved stories of romantic adventure, Sir Walter Scott's "Ivanhoe"!

On the fabled battlefields, amid the moat-rimmed castles, in the green stretches of Sherwood Forest, "Ivanhoe" comes to life. Here, the heroic knights charge into combat, live and love, dare and die. Around them surges the whole medieval pageant, the brilliant cavalcades of crusaders, of kings and conspirators, of troubadours and fair ladies. The storied characters throng across the screen, a masterpiece of fiction comes to life for the first time, and Technicolor makes it entertainment beyond description!

A MAN BECOMES INVISIBLE

Photographer re-creates the emotional crises of a powerful new novel

The wide-eyed man peering cautiously from beneath the manhole cover is "invisible" to the rest of the world. He is the unnamed hero of Invisible Man (Random House, $3.50), a sometimes confusing but powerful first novel by Ralph Ellison. Born a southern Negro, as was the author, the hero comes to New York City, hoping to find a meaning and purpose for his life. Instead, he finds the Brotherhood, a Communistlike organization which uses his eloquence to arouse Harlem to action. Too late he realizes that the Brotherhood is indifferent to Negroes and is ruthlessly using him for its own purposes. The disillusioned hero loses all hope as he learns that other men see him not as an individual but as "just another Negro"—an invisible man. He temporarily withdraws from society, symbolically going underground, until he can learn to live with his tragic truth.

LIFE Photographer Gordon Parks, a friend of Author Ellison, was so moved by this story that he translated it into pictures. With Ellison's help he re-created from the novel the scenes on these pages to show the loneliness, the horror and the disillusionment of a man who has lost faith in himself and his world.

INVISIBLE MAN

MYSTICISM that the hero finds in Harlem is represented by objects—both religious and superstitious—seen in a store window. This Harlem is “not a city of realities, but of dreams,” and hero is sickened by the window displays of “love powders . . . plastic dice . . . and ointments guaranteed to produce the miracle of whitening black skin.”

← HORROR jars the hero when the leader of the Brotherhood, ranting at a breach of discipline, accidentally dislodges his glass eye. As a gesture of toughness he scoops it up and drops it in a glass of water, chanting that discipline is “sacrifice, sacrifice, SACRIFICE.” The Brotherhood’s inhumanity and lack of dignity are revealed at last.

RETREAT is found beneath → the city in an underground room. Here, surrounded by lights, he plays records and eats ice cream and sloe gin as he broods over his invisibility. To take this symbolic picture, Parks built a special room and wired it for lights. Then he superimposed the picture of the room on a picture of New York at night.

A BUSY WEEK FOR CAPTAINS AND KINGS

"To watch . . . the gestures of the proud." This phrase—given as one of the purposes of our magazine in the original prospectus drawn up 16 years ago—has been very much on the editors' minds this week.

It has been a remarkable period of activity among the world's greats, so much of our issue is given over to men and women who ruled, are ruling or may some day rule. Yet the strange thing is how times have changed in 16 years. The rulers are not nearly so proud as they once were; their gestures are by no means so grandiloquent.

The social event of the week was the Eden-Churchill wedding, uniting Britain's proud man in the Homburg with the niece of Britain's proud Prime Minister. Once such a wedding would have been a matter of pomp and circumstance; now the photos have a folksy and homely touch. True, Eden's previous divorce accounts in part for the simplicity of the wedding—but the simplicity is also a matter of the march of history.

Our U.S. visitor of the week was Boy King Faisal. Come next May he will ascend Iraq's throne, ponder its wealth of oil and its ancient poverty, become one of the keys to the turbulent Middle East, have to cope with anti-American advisers and with the threat of Soviet infiltration. Yet in the meantime, how like any plain American boy he looks as he photographs the Dodgers!

We move on to Adlai Stevenson, an aspiring ruler and the busiest politician of the week. What is the ultimate message of the postures that Stevenson struck and the wisecracks he uttered? Possibly just this: Stevenson is a scion of American aristocracy, an Ivy League rich man's son. Now he gropes eagerly for the common touch.

Also in this issue is the first-person story of the rise of Egypt's new ruler and strong man, General Naguib. This is a remarkable document of a 20th Century revolution, the timetable of an efficient and almost bloodless coup. While reading its simple words, think for a moment of the contrast with the complex palace intrigues of history or of Graustark.

There was another part to that phrase from our prospectus: the full promise we made ourselves was "to watch the faces of the poor and the gestures of the proud." And in this issue we also happen to have a young woman born to poverty; we have the first color photo of the funeral in Argentina of a once humble girl named Eva Perón. How odd that this should be the most ornate page of our magazine!

LIFE'S COVER

Before she graduated from Edgewood Park Junior College last year, Diane Macom was a merchandising major. She now spends part of her time modeling, but more of it working in Lord & Taylor's College Shop where she helps dispense apparel like the garment she wears on the cover. Her waist-length sweater (Geist & Geist, $25) has a loose turtleneck and is one of the bulky tops inspired by last fall's Italian collections which may become a new college classic. Other clothes with a four-year future and some that are obviously extras appear on pages 69 to 71.

NEVER AGAIN
need you wake up exhausted...
because of a worn out pillow

PILLOWS OF Firestone FOAMEX[®] HAVE NEVER BEEN KNOWN TO WEAR OUT!

If you've been waking up "dead tired" . . . it well may be that a "dead" pillow's the villain. Chances are, you've been twisting and turning all night, trying to find a comfortable spot for your head. Better change to a pillow of Firestone Foamex now! It's always "live"; it never needs fluffing; can't collapse—even when you hold it on your hand. And no matter how much "sleep pounding" you give it, lively Foamex instantly returns to smooth shape.

Foamex is made of nothing but pure, sweet latex whipped with air. Millions of tiny air-and-latex cells "breathe" with pressure, to circulate fresh, cool air throughout your pillow.

So don't put up with a sleep-stealing pillow. Get a Foamex pillow for a lifetime of sleep-full nights at a cost of a fraction of a penny a week. Your favorite bedding department features pillows of Firestone Foamex. Ask for them by name!

LOOK FOR THIS SMART GIFT CARTON.

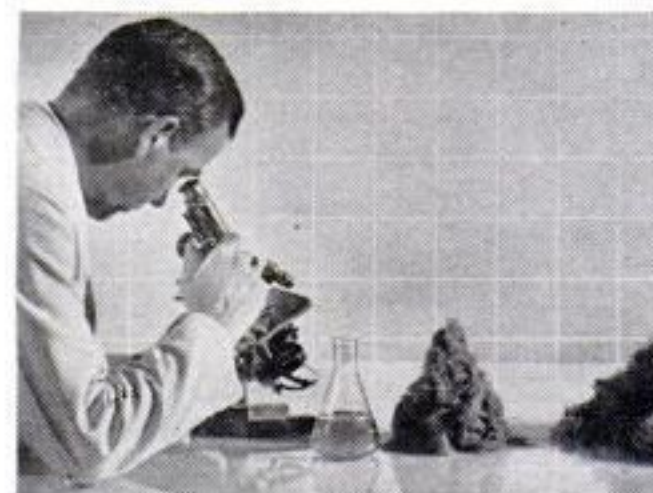

It identifies pillows made of Firestone Foamex—the very finest in foam latex.

Not all foam latex pillows are alike. Pillows of Firestone Foamex are 100% pure latex—quality controlled by Firestone's exacting standards to give you the utmost comfort.

Foamex pillows fit your pillow slips, shams, bolsters. You can be sure they are full-size—no skimping—so that your made-up bed can always have that "perfect appearance."

Foamex is a boon to allergy sufferers. Recommended by leading allergy specialists for the relief of dust-, down- and feather-allergies, Foamex is self-cleaning, self-cooling, too.

Hospitals often wash and sterilize Foamex pillows, although in home use, washing is seldom necessary. Zipper tickings are available that can be removed and laundered.

EDEN WEDS THE BOSS'S FAIR NIECE

For almost 20 years, ever since he emerged as a major figure in Britain's political life, Robert Anthony Eden, intermittent British foreign minister, has been the international glamor boy supreme. Superbly tailored, superbly sculptured, superbly urbane, Eden fluttered hearts from Westminster to Washington, and all the more so because he was unavailable—married to, and later estranged from, his first wife. Then he obtained a divorce.

Last week much international heart-fluttering ended in sudden melancholy, for Anthony Eden married again. But it was a wedding to which only the most unreconstructed Eden admirers could object. For the 55-year-old, grayed but still handsome Briton had wed Clarissa Spencer Churchill, 32—who not only is beautiful, but is Winston Churchill's niece. The marriage bound together even more closely the Prime Minister and the man generally taken to be his political heir-presumptive.

Considering the high estate of those concerned, the ceremony was unusually unostentatious. It was performed in a few minutes, and not in a church but in a registry office, where the rite consists essentially of recording a couple's expressed desire of becoming man and wife. The wedding party was small; the cake had but one tier, and by British law the newlyweds could take only $140 out of the country for honeymoon expense. Commented a wistful London girl, watching in Downing Street, "It was a very quiet wedding, really."

HOLDING HANDS, the bridal couple pauses on the steps of 10 Downing Street to smile happily at the assembled crowd before going in for the wedding party in the famed home of British prime ministers.

EDEN: URBANE, EXPERIENCED, GLAMOROUS

AT ETON, where he won honors in sports and studies, Eden looked like this. Later he fought in World War I.

HIS FIRST MARRIAGE in 1923 to Beatrice Helen Beckett, was held in fashionable church of St. Margaret's, Westminster, a few weeks after his first election to parliamentary seat. They were married for 27 years and had two children.

IN HOMBURG Eden made famous, he came often to Downing Street during the Ethiopian crisis in 1935.

TALK WITH HITLER convinced him appeasement would not win. He resigned from appeasing government.

WITH HIS WIFE Eden attended a 1939 party, after his resignation, in the full dress of a privy councillor.

DURING THE WAR Eden was visited by elder son Simon, an airman. In 1945 Simon was killed in Burma.

IN U.S. in 1943 Eden spoke under a portrait of ancestor, Sir Robert Eden, governor of Maryland, 1769 to 1776.

AT QUEBEC, August 1943, Eden aided Churchill, greeted President Roosevelt (above). Background: Canadian Premier Mackenzie King stands smiling.

AFTER THE WAR Eden and Churchill were both deposed by the Labor victory, held conference in a field at Chartwell, latter's country home in Kent.

ESTRANGED WIFE moved her residence to New York in 1947, laughingly identified these friends for the photographer as "Tom, Dick and Harry."

CLARISSA: BEAUTY COMBINED WITH BRAINS

LOVELIEST DEBUTANTE of the year, in opinion of many, Clarissa attended a London ball in 1938 with late father, Major John Churchill (left).

FRIENDS for years, Clarissa and Eden both attended a movie premiere in 1948. Their romantic attachment, however, dates from only two years ago.

AT A GAY BALL last year Clarissa (left) good-humoredly represented a lily. She is studiously intellectual and interested in the arts and literature.

AS HOUR OF DEPARTURE ON THEIR HONEYMOON DREW NEAR, A MOTHER HERDED HER YOUNGSTERS OUT OF CARS' WAY IN CROWDED DOWNING STREET

CHURCH PAPER HITS A DISCORDANT NOTE

J. DUMSDAY HOLIDAY

To some superstitious people the name of the registrar who married Eden sounded like a dark omen for the marriage: J. Dumsday Holiday. And indeed the day following the wedding a High-Church Anglican newspaper, the Church Times, sharply criticized the foreign minister for remarrying "during the lifetime of his divorced wife" (Eden obtained a divorce in 1950, charging desertion). It also made reference to "a pagan generation" and compared Eden's action to "the unprecedented adoption by the American Democrats of a divorced man as candidate for the presidency."

But other English papers rushed quickly to Eden's defense. "Poor taste," commented the London News Chronicle on the Church Times's editorial; "... inexcusable ... intrusion into a citizen's private affairs," added the Daily Herald. And the influential Manchester Guardian trumpeted: "[The Church Times's] comments ... will have precisely the reverse effect from what was intended. They will rather make most of us glad that we do belong to a 'pagan generation' if the alternative is the rule of an intolerant clericalism. ... The absolutists on divorce ... live in a country where the majority do not agree with them. And they must make the best of it without being offensive in their dogmatism." Meanwhile, oblivious to this heated exchange, the Edens were honeymooning in Portugal where Clarissa, like any other flustered bride, presently discovered that she had left part of her luggage at home.

LUCKY HORSESHOE treasured from her own wedding cake is thrust on Eden by a woman onlooker as he and bride emerge from the registry office.

LUCKY HORSE is fed sugar, precious in austere times, by another onlooker. The mounted and foot police kept order but extras had to be called out.

PLEASANT CONFUSION marked the couple's appearance in garden behind No. 10, with Eden the only stationary figure. Mrs. Churchill is advancing toward the news photographers while the bride wanders away to join her uncle. Churchill served as chief witness for Eden at the wedding ceremony.

FAREWELL HAND IS OFFERED HER FAMOUS UNCLE BY BRIDE AS SHE AND EDEN LEAVE ON HONEYMOON

CHURCHILLS AND EDENS MAKE MEMORABLE WEDDING PORTRAIT→

WE AGREE, MR. KENNEDY

There has been no rougher, tougher, smarter bunch of politicians anywhere than the Massachusetts Democrats. They're going to be tough again this year. As their candidate for the Senate they have a fine young man named Jack Kennedy, 35, son of famed Ambassador Joseph Patrick Kennedy and grandson of one of the biggest local politicians of all. Jack Kennedy is smart and has smart advisers—as witness the fact that he fired the first big gun of his campaign last week with a demand that President Truman call a special session of Congress to pass a new price control law.

We just want to tell Candidate Kennedy that we agree with him 100%.

Prices are one of the real big problems of the day. There is no question that most people are worried about the high cost of living. Any candidate who comes out foursquare for low prices is bound to occupy popular ground.

On the other hand, it so happens that many voters are workmen who want high wages. And many others are farmers who want high prices for food. And unless we are badly mistaken, the Democrats have been in the position for a long time of trying to work every possible side of the street. Particularly in this campaign year, they seem to be advertising themselves simultaneously as the party of high wages, of high prices to farmers and of low prices to housewives.

Well, let's take a look. The Democrats control all branches of the U.S. government. They have multitudes of experts available to draw up a price control law. They have the power to pass it—majority control of the Senate and the House of Representatives. Let's have that special session and see what the Democrats can do about prices.

Indeed it seems rather odd that a special session should even be necessary at this point. Under President Roosevelt, who always had an overwhelmingly Democratic Congress, prices went up about 30% from the 1935-39 "normal." Under Truman they have gone up another 60 percentage points. (He always blamed the Republican 80th Congress for his price troubles, but the fact is that prices have continued to rise steadily ever since Truman and the Democratic 81st Congress were restored to the throne in the '48 elections.) Seems to us that the Democrats should have had plenty of time to catch on that prices are high—and to get exactly the kind of price law they wanted.

You don't suppose, do you, that Candidate Kennedy is kidding? Could it be that the Democrats don't really want that special session—that they would rather be able just to claim they're for price-fixing, without undertaking all the onerous details? Could it be that the smartest politics of all is to deplore inflation in speeches while encouraging it in actions?

WE LOVE YOU, MR. COOPER

That long slim cowboy name of Gary Cooper, as you will see on page 73, is celebrating his 25th anniversary in the movies. We can't let the occasion pass without remarking that Old Highpockets is quite a fellow, and has given us considerable cheer over the last quarter century.

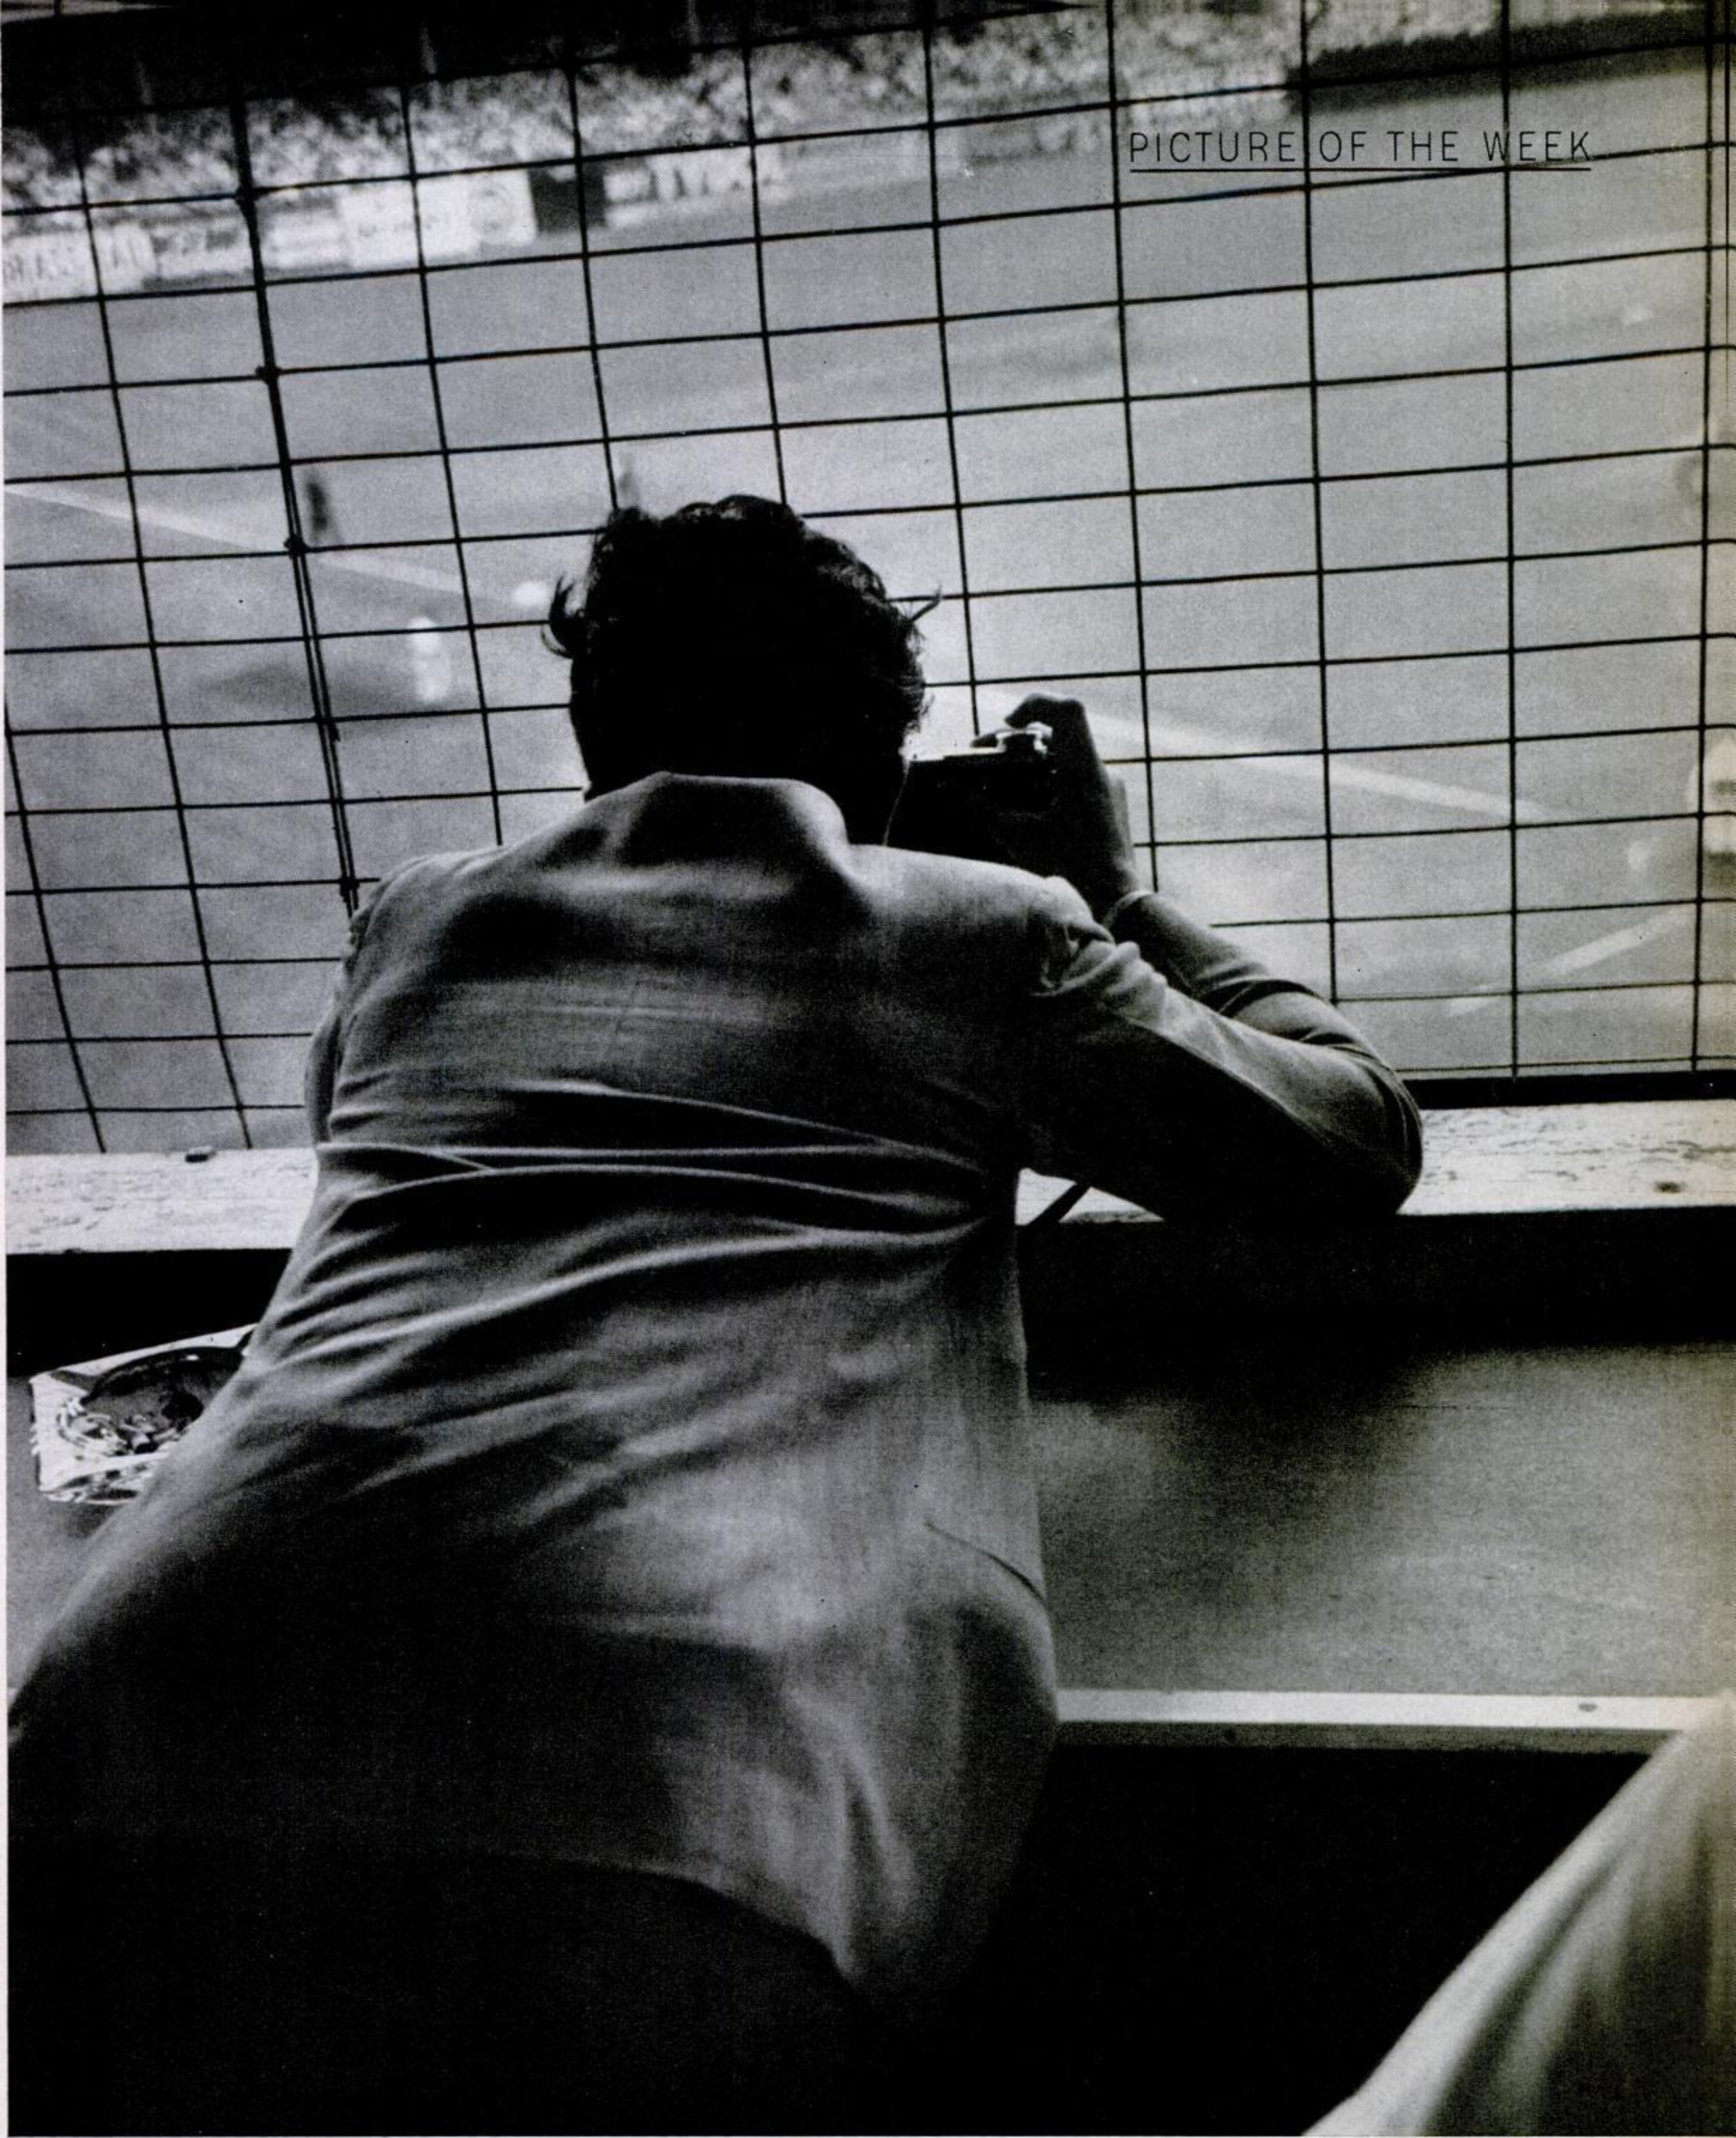

Oh, to look like Gary Cooper. There's a fellow who doesn't need a Brooks Brothers suit, shoulder pads, a button-down shirt, a hand-painted tie or even a shoe-shine. Just give him a pair of tight-fitting pants for his leg muscles to strain against, an old shirt and vest to keep his chest expansion within bounds, a black string tie to hide his Adam's apple and a dusty pair of boots to die in. He'll go riding away tree-tall and grim, looking the way a man should look, a friend to the righteous, a hero to children and a flytrap to women. Doesn't have to say a word. Doesn't even have to smile. One look at Gary Cooper and the weak take heart, the villains take to cover and the women faint.

But of course it isn't just Gary. A man's man has to have a man's world to operate in—and where could you find it today outside the Western movie? So let us not forget either that this year marks the 50th anniversary of The Virginian, the first of the Western novels, the prototype of all the corny but wonderful books that have comforted the overcivilized, the fountainhead of Hollywood's great and apparently immortal horse opera industry. Without The Virginian we might never have had Western movies, we would never have had Gary and we would never have been the same (nor would television).

Even the old ones, the kind going the rounds on TV, have a marvelously soothing effect. The old heroes, perhaps not so long and lean as Gary but equally shrewd, taciturn and manly: William S. Hart, Tom Mix, Tim McCoy. The heroine who never demands equal rights, mink, Chanel No. 5 or even a kiss. The villain who can be spotted at a glance by his mustache and his coal-black horse. The short cut through the pass, the overhanging branch into which the hero will catapult, the soothing sound of gunfire that never really kills anybody. In television areas, even the 6-year-olds can tell you the plot after the first reel, and even their parents stay right on through to the inevitable triumphant end. This is what the modern world needs: simplicity, stability, predictability, spotless heroes, unmitigated villains and a lot less fancy talk.

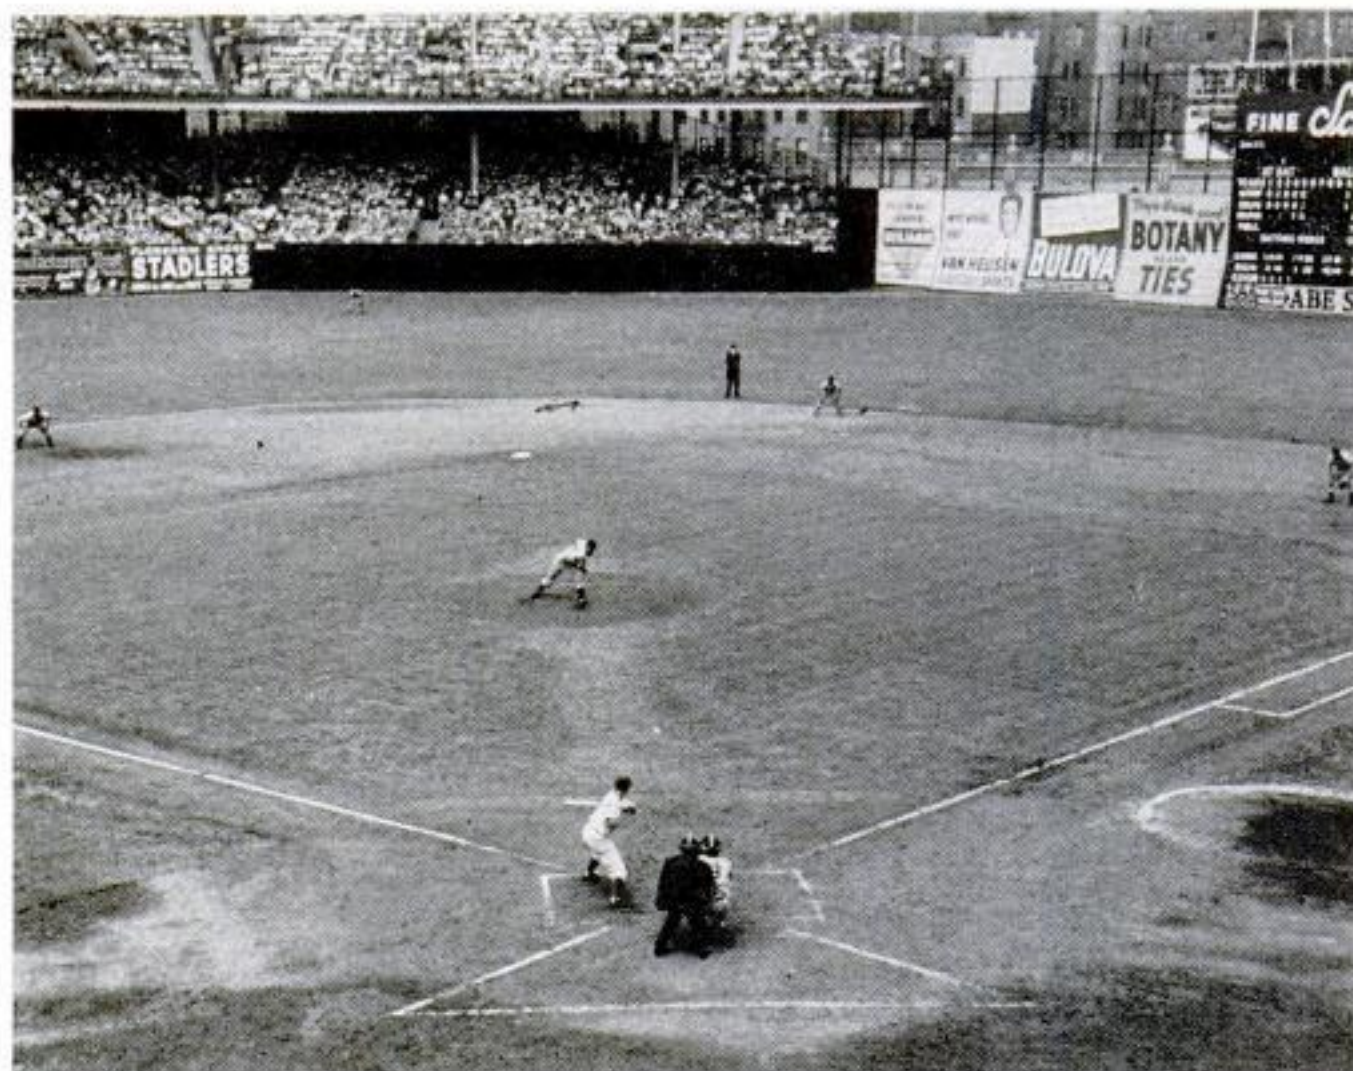

Of course the Westerns in the theaters today are a far cry from the old ones. They're in Technicolor now and full of realism. The cowboys reload their revolvers after every sixth shot. The heroines have psychological problems and the heroes like to settle down, instead of fleeing the minute the girls begin to get lights in their eyes. They even have some new plots nowadays, not all of which are predictable in complete detail. But it's still the movie West—where men are men and women love 'em, and no villain is ever going to get to first base. It's a better world by far than the one outside the theater.

A KINGLY CAMERAMAN

THE KING TAKES SOME PHOTOGRAPHS

SPORTS SHOT by Photographer Faisal shows Jim Hearn of the Giants pitching to Pee Wee Reese of the Dodgers in last of fifth inning. Dodgers won 5-4.

SCENIC SHOT of the outdoor cafe in Rockefeller Center was made by King Faisal from atop the International Building during his guided tour of the area.

ROYAL VISITOR LOOKS AT U.S.

King Faisal is a slight, affable 17-year-old with a strong British accent and a fondness for history, photography (preceding page) and the Brooklyn Dodgers. As he began his U.S. stay last week, he combined two of his hobbies and covered the Giant-Dodger ball game, using LIFE Photographer Yale Joel's camera. Since the Dodgers won 5-4, it was a happy start for the young king's visit. He was invited to this country by President Truman and the State Department, both of whom are well aware of the strategic importance of Iraq and the turbulent Middle East in the current world situation. Faisal has been king of the ancient, oil-rich country of Iraq (legendary site of the Garden of Eden) since he was three, but he will not actually begin to rule until next May, when he becomes 18. Like many a less regal tourist, King Faisal took a guided tour of Rockefeller Center and a boat trip around Manhattan. Unlike most tourists, he was constantly surrounded by State Department men as well as his own staff and reporters and photographers (who kept yelling, "Just one more, please, king"). In spite of the crowds Faisal managed to see and enjoy South Pacific and to inspect an oil refinery in New Jersey. At week's end he flew to Washington for luncheon with his official host, President Truman. Later, he will see a Ford assembly line in Michigan, tour power and irrigation projects (in which he is particularly interested) in California, Colorado and Tennessee and watch demonstrations of the latest American jets, tanks and artillery. The State Department hopes that young King Faisal will become a strong friend in the Middle East, where U.S. friends are few and even Faisal's close advisers may be anti-American.

YOUTHFUL CHARM of King Faisal captivated reporters during press conference held at Yale Club, where he stayed in New York. He said he hadn't yet done any "kingly things" like signing documents.

HE GETS AN EDUCATION IN BASEBALL

BASEBALL BADINAGE in Dodger dugout pleased king until his uncle made him remove ball cap as undignified. "I guess I'd better leave now," said king.

CRICKET TECHNIQUE is shown to Jackie Robinson during radio interview. "At cricket, the spectators just clap," said the king. "At baseball, they cheer."

HE SEES RADIO CITY, 'SOUTH PACIFIC'

PRETTY GIRL GUIDE escorted king and party through Rockefeller Center. Visit is most excitement king has had since he was kidnaped during 1941 revolt.

PRETTY GIRL SINGER Martha Wright, star of South Pacific, received roses after king saw the show. She said king's presence had made the cast nervous.

HE GETS A DINNER, A TOUR, A LUNCH

AT DINNER in king's honor at New York's plush River Club, he chats with Mrs. Thomas J. Watson.

AT OIL REFINERY in New Jersey, the king feels powdery catalyst used in making high octane gas.

AT LUNCHEON at White House, the king shakes hands with the President, his official host in U.S.

ADLAI REACHES FOR THE COMMON TOUCH

When Governor Adlai Stevenson mounted a Chicago rostrum to accept the Democratic nomination he delivered a speech that set new literary standards for present-day political oratory. It was at once humble and lofty, the words and thoughts of a man who would appeal to intellectuals. But almost immediately the governor dismounted from his pedestal and began to strive for the common touch. Next day he referred to the delegates as "the finest political livestock," and introduced Sparkman, his running mate, as a prize among them. From then on he persistently turned out small jokes, self-effacing remarks and even puns—all carefully reported—at the rate of a couple a day. Explaining that he was busy, he quipped, "In the words of the young preacher, I am working to beat Hell."

Visiting his old home in Bloomington, Ill., he said that in his case it was not "Home town boy makes good," but "Good home town makes boy." Recently situations like those shown below have moved him to turn out jokes even faster. At Springfield, unveiling a statue, he pulled aside a curtain with "I'm happy this isn't my shirt I'm pulling off." In Washington, after his celebrated luncheon with the President and Cabinet, he remarked, "Another such lunch and I'll be so fat I won't be able to campaign." And on Thursday, back in Springfield again, he scouted Republican accusations that he was "captive" of the Truman Administration by slipping an ad-lib into his speech: "Next week I'll probably read in the paper that I'm the captive of a girl named Ada, but I haven't met her yet."

SIPPING a milkshake too thick to pass through a straw, Stevenson tried one suck, then handed it to boy with "Here. You look undernourished."

POSING for photographers at capital, he said, "These are the times one wishes God had endowed one with something better in the way of a face."

POINTING, after cameramen asked him to wave, he spied secretaries watching from nearby building, told Sparkman, "Now we can do some real waving."

TRUMAN QUIP got the President into the act. When a reporter said politely, "How do you do?" the President cracked right back, "I do as I please."

TRUMAN SLIP came when he said Adlai would be in White House Nov. 4, instead of Jan. 20, corrected self with "I almost gave you two months there."

KIDDING HIMSELF he told ladies at party headquarters about his posing. "They haven't had so much trouble with me since I was in dancing school."

KIDDING McKINNEY, the Democratic chairman whom he ousted, Stevenson at headquarters says, "You don't mean to say you get mail here?"

LEARNING THE ROPES from Alben Barkley, a past master at the common touch, Stevenson leans forward and laughs as Veep cracks, "I got more applause and fewer votes than anybody at the convention." He spoke at Springfield after Stevenson had introduced him as "the youngest of them all."

VISUAL FOLKSINESS is attempted by Stevenson who winks as he shows off a new campaign button at the fair in Springfield, Ill. Beside him is Barkley, who followed him to the platform. In his speech Stevenson ticked off the forces said to be his "captors"—the C.I.O., the Dixiecrats and Wall Street—found it not too uncomfortable to be captured "by most everybody except the Republican Old Guard," and got a laugh with "Don't you send me any CARE packages!"

AFTER 3,000-FOOT DROP, BLIMP SETTLES TO SURFACE OF WATER BEHIND SUBMARINE "SEAPOACHER" WITH WHICH IT HAD BEEN COORDINATING MANEUVERS

TOWLINE FASTENED TO SUBMARINE, BLIMP RISES AS SUB GETS UNDER WAY. TRIP BACK TO BASE AT BOCA CHICA WAS MADE AT AVERAGE SPEED OF 15 KNOTS

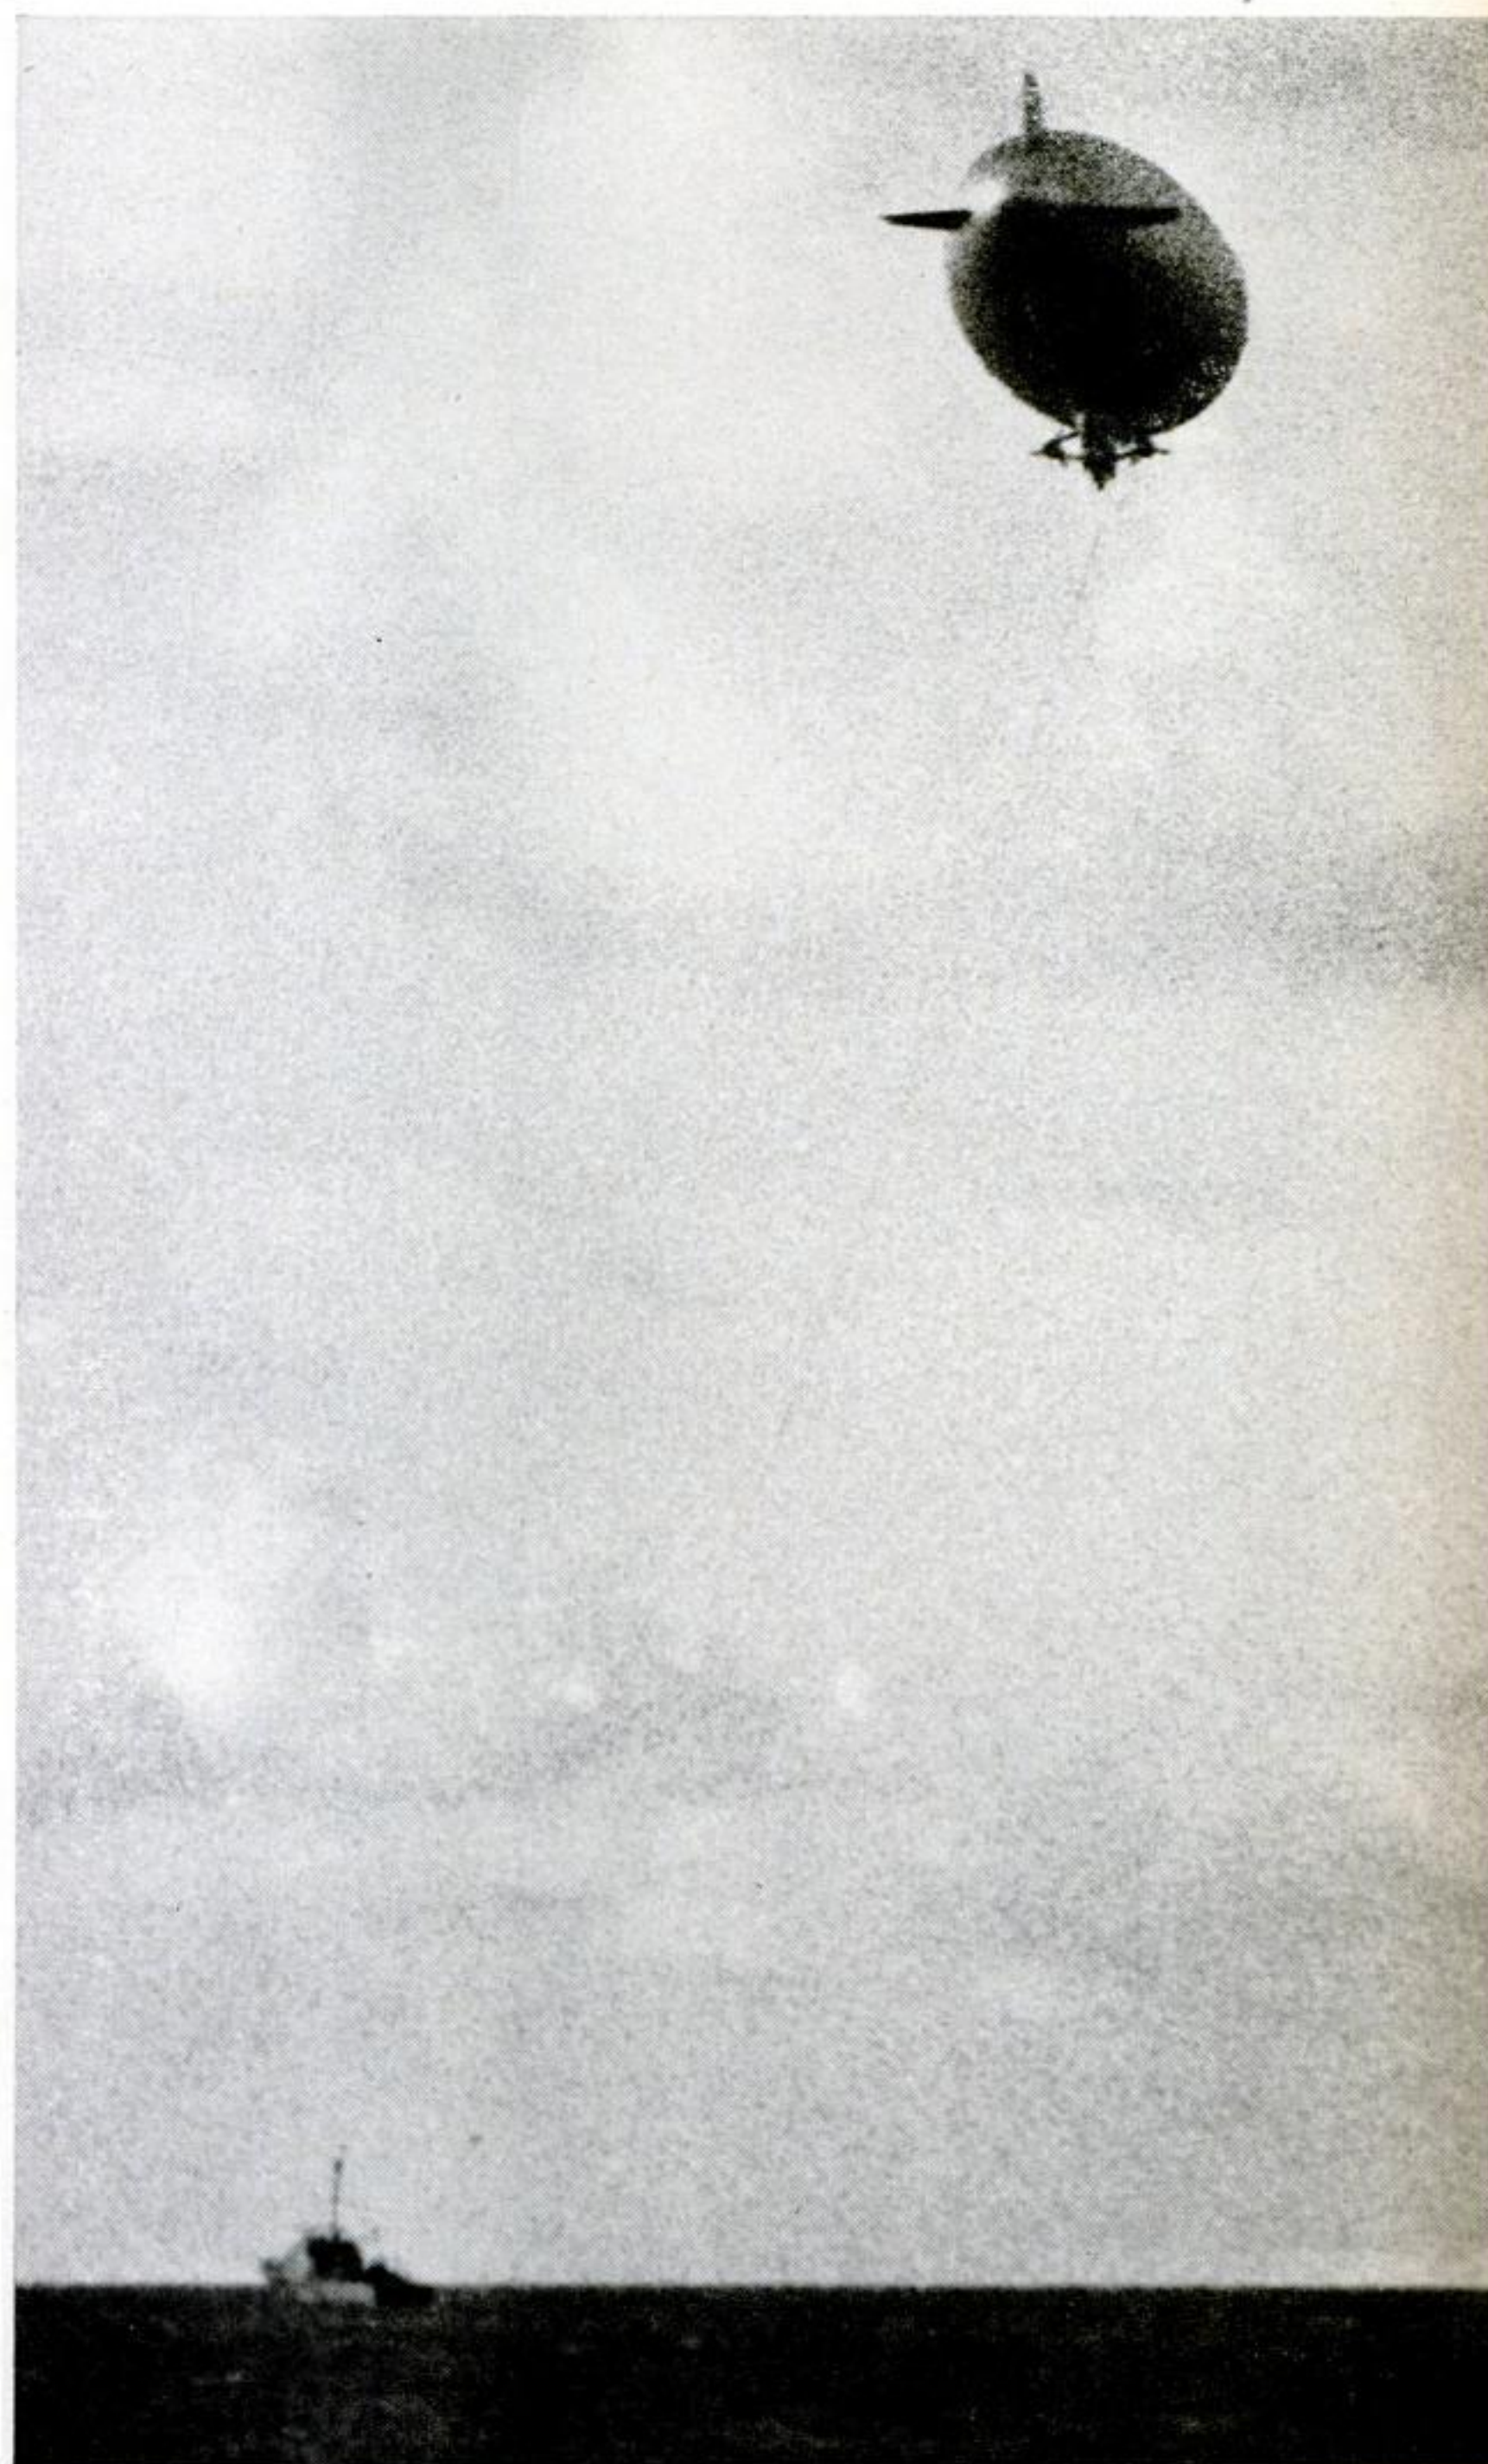

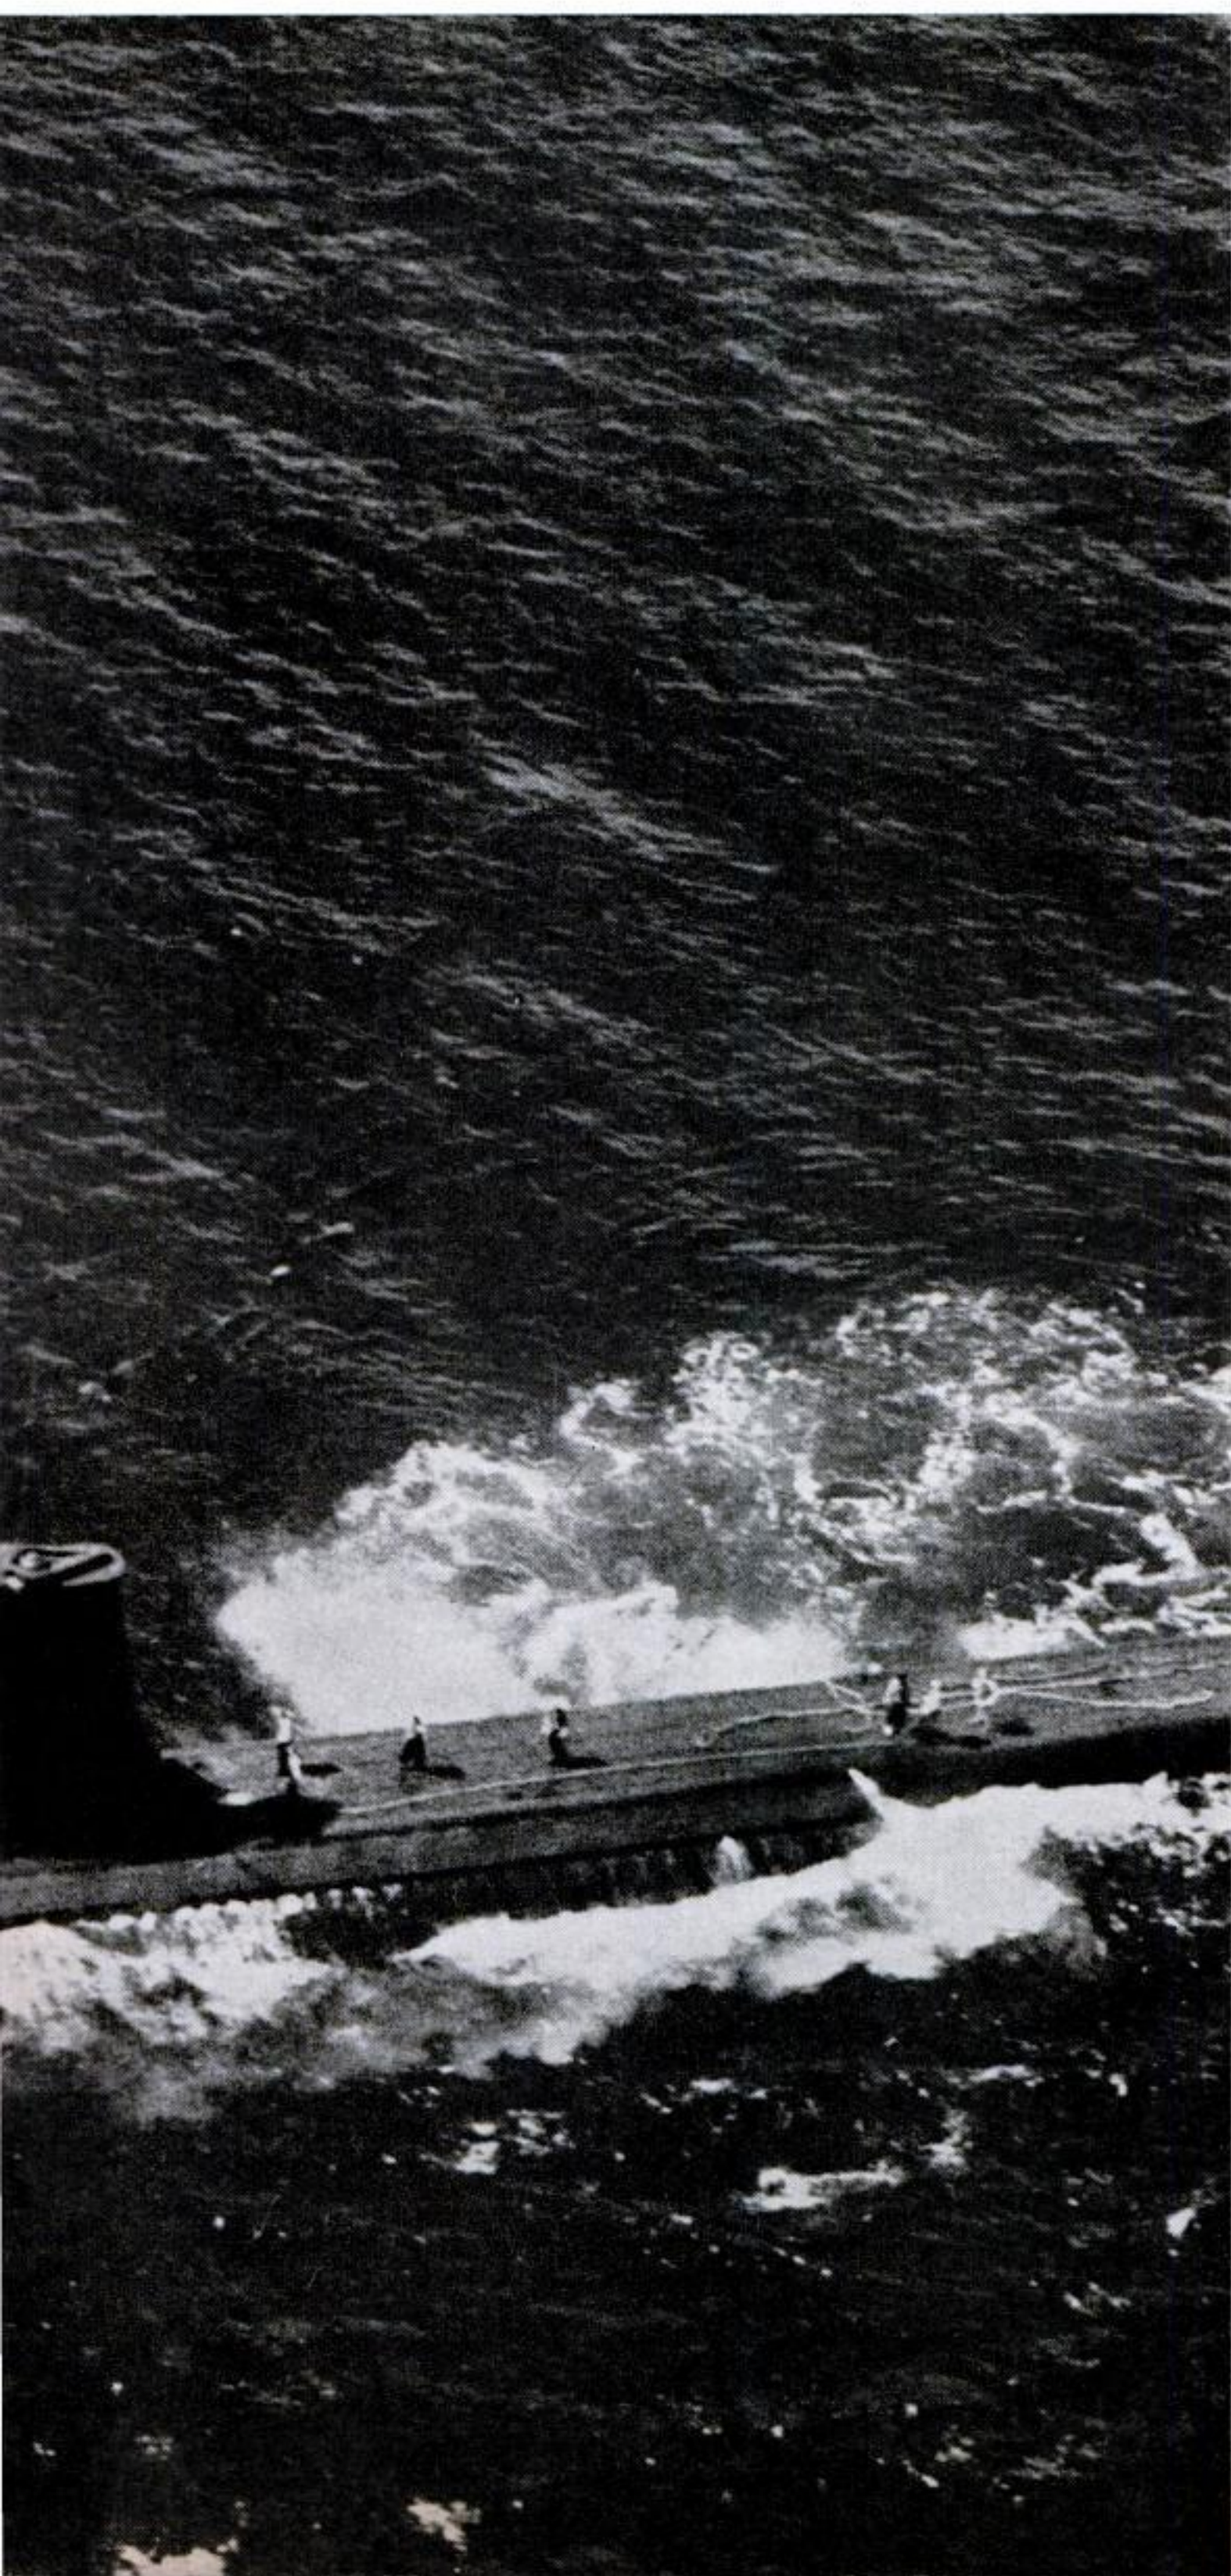

A SUBMARINE RESCUES A DISABLED BLIMP

Undersea craft makes naval history by towing lighter-than-air ship through stormy wind and water

Off the Florida coast a blimp engaged in a Navy test of electronic equipment hit a sudden downdraft and was slapped into the sea. When it bounced up again its propellers were bent and its engines flooded. Without their power to hold it down to a given altitude, the blimp became in effect a free balloon and rose 3,000 feet before the pilot could bring it down to the sea again by releasing helium. There it was either smashing its gondola into three-foot-high waves or being borne into the air by gusts of wind. The crew moved the blimp's priceless equipment onto a rubber raft which had been launched from a nearby submarine, the U.S.S. Seapoacher. Sparks from the radio twice started fires in the gondola, full of gasoline fumes as a result of water pressure on the fuel tanks, but they were extinguished. Then a towline from the blimp was made fast to the submarine, the sub headed back for its base at Boca Chica, and the blimp rose in the air like a kite. For 3½ hours it was dragged along, fighting a 50-mile gale which once slammed it back in the ocean so hard that the three men remaining aboard were hip-deep in water. The blimp had to spend all night outside the harbor entrance at Boca Chica because the channels through the coral reefs were too tricky to be navigated in darkness. But at dawn the haul was successfully completed, marking the first time in naval history that a blimp—one of whose chief functions in time of war is to destroy submarines—was itself rescued by a sub.

HAPPY END of the blimp's adventures came when towline was transferred to a surface vessel which brought it ashore. Rescue of blimp saved Navy $600,000.

TAKING A BREAK BETWEEN CONVENTION MEETINGS, FIVE DELEGATES CATCH UP ON THEIR SUNBURN

The jaded press has some fun with Jersey nudist convention

U.S. editors are plagued each year by conventions ranging from solemn conclaves of morticians to frivolous meetings of the potato chip industry (LIFE, Feb. 28, 1949) and they are apathetic when it comes time for the nudists to convene. Then they are apt to remark, with a sourness unusual even for them, that the delegates would look better clothed. But this year a section of the New York press, led by the Daily News and the local office of the United Press, decided to polish up the ancient summertime cliché by giving it a supercliché treatment. When 300 nudists, representing 3,500 members of the American Sunbathing Association, met at Mays Landing, N.J. last week, the photographers and reporters poured into the convention. They were delighted to note the ruckus that ensued when delegates, earnestly campaigning, rejected Alois Knapp, candidate of their long-time leader, Dr. Ilsley Boone, a Baptist minister. With the aid of proxy votes one Mervin Mounce swept into the presidency by a vote of 1,457 to 430. Copyreaders, ignoring the issues but not the fight, had a punster's picnic (above). They found signs of "cleavage" in nudist politics and piled on phrases like "take-off," "nothing up their sleeves" and bade a fond farewell to the whole story with a headline, NO NUDES IS GOOD NUDES.

POLITICAL LOSER, Dr. Boone, head of one faction, checks list with daughter-in-law.

CANDIDATE LEN SCHMITT ANSWERS TALKATHON QUESTIONS FROM BARBER CHAIR

PATENTED PERORATIONS

An enterprising promoter sells the 'Talkathon' to voters of three states

PROMOTER VENN

Political candidates of 1952, if they have iron constitutions and brass lungs, can avail themselves of a brand-new weapon, the Talkathon. Theoretically it is simple: the aspirant for office sits before a radio microphone and a battery of telephones, and as questions come in over the phones he goes on answering them and answering them and answering them. In practice, candidates have found it necessary to engage a Miami advertising man named Bob Venn, who not only has a staff and technical know-how, but has applied for a trademark on the title "Talkathon." Venn unveiled the Talkathon in May in the Florida primaries, helped get his man Brailey Odham an impressive 328,000 votes, though he lost. Venn moved to bigger things in Arkansas, where his experts impressarioed Judge Francis Cherry through 21 Talkathons, ranging from four to 24½ hours. Cherry won, and gave a boost to the Talkathon business. Len Schmitt, challenging Senator McCarthy in the Wisconsin Republican primary, had a try at it last week. He broke Cherry's record with a 25-hour session, interrupted by visits to the bathroom but not by eating or shaving (above). Schmitt answered 1,187 questions ranging from "Name one innocent person McCarthy has harmed" (Answer: General Marshall) to "Do you drink?" (Answer: Sometimes a social drink). Whatever luck Schmitt has, a new customer has signed up for Bob Venn's brainchild: Mike DiSalle, ex-price boss running for Senator in Ohio.

OPPOSING TALKATHON, friends of Arkansas Governor McMath ran cartoon against Talker Cherry in papers.

INVADING TALKATHON, McMath (left) appeared with Cherry in Helena to answer some questions himself.

A new atomic plant gets under way and an old gambler returns to prison

In an effort to step up production of atomic weapons, the Atomic Energy Commission announced that it was building a huge $1.2 billion plant in southern Ohio. Farms and farmhouses will have to be cleared away to make room for the 6,500-acre U-235 factory, which will take four years to complete. The chief contractor will be Peter Kiewit, who has built dams, hospitals, houses and military bases for the government. By putting up the new plant and expanding the plants already in existence, the AEC hopes to meet the Defense Department's atomic weapon requirements five years sooner than would be possible at the current rate of production.

For years the suburban town of Edina (pop. 9,744) has argued with Minneapolis (pop. 521,718) about removing the streetcar tracks along France Avenue—the boundary line between them. Last week Edina got tired of the ancient argument and tore up its half of the tracks in order to pave its half of the street. If Minneapolis can figure out a way to run a streetcar on the one remaining track, that's perfectly all right with Edina.

NATO armies run short of men

NATO is having serious trouble over military commitments. Despite General Matthew Ridgway's plea for a two-year European conscription period, Belgium and Germany have already announced that they will draft their men for shorter periods, and the other European nations are expected to follow suit. France has warned that she may not be able to meet her commitments (LIFE, Aug. 4), and now England says that unless help is forthcoming, she may not be able to maintain her five divisions in Germany.

PRISON WAGON DELIVERS COSTELLO TO JAIL

Back in 1915 a young immigrant from Italy named Frank Castiglia spent 10 months in jail for carrying a concealed weapon. During the next 37 years he changed his name and became the gambling king of America—one of the wealthiest and most powerful men in the underworld. Last week, for his contempt of the Senate Crime Investigating Committee, Frank Costello went back to jail. His second sentence is for 18 months.

HICKMAN CONDUCTS FOOTBALL CLASS ON TV

Yale loses Coach Hickman to TV

For the last two football seasons the 300-pound hulk of Yale Coach Herman Hickman has loomed large on the television screen as well as on the football field. On the gridiron his record was mediocre—16 wins, 18 defeats, 2 ties—but on television his quick mind and massive joviality proved so successful that he claimed credit for making small TV screens obsolete. Some alumni objected to the dual role, but Hickman was so popular at Yale that he was given an unprecedented 10-year contract. Last week, with nine years of his contract still to go, Hickman resigned as Yale coach and signed up with the General Cigar Company for a weekly television show beginning this fall.

Republican Nominee Dwight D. Eisenhower had some hard words to say about Adlai Stevenson's luncheon with the President's cabinet (p. 26). The inclusion of Generals Omar Bradley and Walter Bedell Smith among the luncheon guests was, Ike said, an effort "to involve responsible nonpolitical officers" in a political campaign. Next day he received an invitation to attend a similar cabinet luncheon for a similar briefing. Ike said thank you but declined to get caught in what his advisers considered a political trap.

Boy Scouts repel Red menace

The Senate Internal Security subcommittee had evidence that the Communists were really playing dirty. In the 1930s, it revealed, the Communists had tried to destroy the Boy Scouts of America. First they had set up a rival organization, the Young Pioneers. "Smash the Boy Scouts! Join the Young Pioneers!" was the slogan. Pamphlets said that Scouts promoted "capitalistic wars," fostered "militarization of children" and took part in "the murder of striking workers." The Boy Scouts stood firm, but then the Communists tried infiltration tactics.

Chief Scout Executive Arthur Schuck explained that the infiltration movement had failed completely because "our system of analysis of each application has resulted in our refusing membership or weeding out such men." And let no one think that the Communists are doing any better now than they did in the '30s. "Every Scout," said Leader Schuck, "must take a pledge of loyalty to God and country."

OLEO HEIR JELKE

Socialite Minot Frazier ("Mickey") Jelke will inherit a $3 million oleomargarine fortune when he is 25, but right now he is only 22 and New York City police charged he was getting his pin money in a most illegal fashion—by running a deluxe call-girl business with prices as high as $500. He was arrested for compulsory prostitution, conspiracy and possessing loaded weapons. Jelke was caught with a blonde and a black book full of price quotations in an apartment full of nude pictures, but he said the charges were "silly." In Chicago his father explained, "Mickey just likes good-looking girls."

Full blame for the disaster which cost 176 lives was placed on the Hobson's captain, William J. Tierney, who—the court said—committed a "grave error of judgment" in maneuvers. Tierney went down with his ship.

Quadrigamist goes 'phooey-blooe'

Leroy Holzman worked as a tourist guide in New Orleans, but his favorite job was driving limousines at weddings because, he said, "It's a wonderful thing when two people get married." Last week his enthusiasm for marriage got him in trouble. When he "borrowed" $2,200 from his wife Ernestine, she accused him of theft and had him thrown in jail. Then wives popped up all over the place, and it turned out that in addition to Ernestine, the 33-year-old Holzman was also married to a Clara, a Cecile and a Martha Jo—all of New Orleans. Holzman said he had kept his wives separate by taking one to the beach, one to the movies and one out driving, and "then I would alternate the entertainment the next day and so on." The only explanation he could think of for his quadrigamy was that he had gone "phooey-blooe."

NOW! The most exciting Upside-down Cake ever!

RECIPE FOR "SUPER-GOOBER" CAKE ... the Swans Down Cake Mix Creation for Peanut-butter Lovin' Kids of all Ages!

If you own a skillet, you can turn out this newest, most exciting Swans Down Instant Cake Mix quickie—"Super-Goober."

It's a glorified new upside-down beauty—the tenderest, most delicious cake you ever tasted, topped with a peanut-butter and peach-slices concoction that sets your taste buds singing.

DO get a package of wonderful Swans Down Instant Cake Mix and try this recipe today:

¼ cup butter
½ cup peanut butter
½ cup brown sugar
¼ cup peach juice
1¾ cups well-drained canned sliced peaches

Cake Batter:
1 package Swans Down
Instant Cake Mix
2 tablespoons sugar
1¼ cups milk
2 egg yolks, unbeaten

Combine butter, peanut butter, brown sugar, and peach juice in 9½-inch iron skillet or 9 x 9 x 2-inch square pan. Place over low heat and stir until butter is melted and mixture is blended. Remove from heat. Arrange peaches on mixture. Set aside.

Turn Swans Down Instant Cake Mix into bowl. Add sugar and ½ cup of the milk. Blend, then beat 1 minute. Add ¼ cup more milk. Blend, then beat 1 minute. Then add egg yolks and remaining ½ cup milk and beat 1 minute longer. (Beat cake vigorously by hand or at medium speed of electric mixer.)

Pour batter carefully over peach mixture. Bake in moderate oven (375°F.) 35 to 40 minutes for skillet, or about 50 minutes for pan. Cool cake 5 minutes. Then invert on serving plate and let stand 1 minute before removing pan. If desired, sprinkle with chopped peanuts. Serve warm with whipped cream or ice cream.

the NEWEST and the BEST way to do dishes!

the BEST way to "do dishes"!

DISHWASHER

Revolving Rack with wonder-working SwirlClean Action eliminates "hit or miss" washing—gets all dishes, glasses, and silver completely clean!

Never again must the joy of a wonderful meal be ruined by messy dishwashing afterward! For Crosley now brings you its superb Automatic Dishwasher—the newest and best way to do dishes.

The Crosley is different from any dishwasher you ever heard of—different and much better . . . better because Crosley's Revolving Rack gives you marvelous SwirlClean Action. That is, during the whole washing and rinsing cycle, this upper rack of dishes gently rotates so that every single article in it is bathed by cleansing spray. In other dishwashers large pieces in the lower rack can block the spray from the dishes above—but not in Crosley!

E-nor-mous Capacity! Your Crosley Dishwasher will take approximately 60 pieces of china and glassware and 48 pieces of silver. And it's so safe—plastic-covered racks mean no chipping of dishes . . . automatic safety device stops action if the door is accidentally opened.

Yes, Crosley gives you the dishwasher that has everything and "then some." It's the dishwasher you want—see it at your Crosley Dealer's today!

THE MOST WONDERFUL WORK-SAVER YOU CAN PUT IN YOUR KITCHEN!
Every feature means more leisure for you!

1 Revolving Rack with SwirlClean Action means every dish and piece of silver catches cleansing spray.

5 Dishes get a pre-wash "spray" rinse plus one "spray" and two "power" rinses after washing.

9 Automatic Safety Switch stops all action if door is accidentally opened during dishwashing operation.

2 Revolving Rack pulls out and rotates—lower rack rolls out—for quickest, easiest loading of dishes.

6 Special heater unit maintains correct temperature for washing, rinsing and drying the dishes.

10 Hot humid air is forced out of vent at back, giving a shorter, more efficient drying cycle.

3 Both racks are removable. With Revolving Rack out, extra-large pieces can easily be washed.

7 To prevent possible re-depositing of sticky food particles, impeller stops during drain cycles.

11 Steam- and air-vent location at the back prevents condensation and dripping around door.

4 Whirling impeller sends powerful cleansing spray to all parts of dishwasher, cleansing pieces thoroughly.

8 You can turn Indicator Control Dial to stop, change, skip or repeat any operation you desire.

12 Foolproof control mechanism . . . you just load, close door, turn the handle to "on"!

YOU WANT THE DISHWASHER THAT GIVES YOU ALL THESE FEATURES!

Deliciously yours!

WARTIME PICTURE, taken soon after battle of San Juan Hill, shows Lieut. Col. Teddy Roosevelt (center) looking as rough and ready as his men. In four months a fourth of the Riders were casualties.

THE ROUGH RIDERS RIDE AGAIN

The thinning ranks of Teddy Roosevelt's men close for a reunion

Just 54 years ago Teddy Roosevelt left his post as assistant secretary of the Navy, became a lieutenant colonel in the Army and set about raising a volunteer cavalry regiment of the "harum-scarum rough riders of the West." Thanks to the Rough Riders, Teddy had a ready-made springboard to the presidency, and thanks to Teddy's influence, the 1,000 men of his First U.S. Volunteer Cavalry had better equipment, better food—and better publicity—than any other fighting unit in the Spanish-American War. The Rough Riders' charge up San Juan Hill to Santiago, Cuba remains a high point in American exuberance, even though the hill had already been captured. Teddy's boys held their first reunion in 1899 in Las Vegas, N. Mex. As they met there again this month, the rolls showed only 104 Rough Riders still alive, and of these only 28 could attend. Two of the boys could still mount a horse (next page), and all were full of spirit. But their talk now was of old friends and their own infirmities, rather than of the wild confusions and sudden glories of those distant days in Cuba.

REUNION PICTURE, taken during barbecue at a New Mexico ranch, shows 25 of 28 who attended.

The boys also took part in a parade and watched some present-day rough riders perform in a rodeo.

SPRYEST of the rough riders at reunion was Jess D. Langdon, 75, shown dancing with rodeo queen.

FROM BALCONIES ABOVE EVA'S PORTRAIT ON INFORMATION BUILDING, MOURNERS TOSS FLOWERS ONTO CORTEGE

A FLOWERY FAREWELL TO EVITA

Fifteen days after her death a million people assemble for funeral march

In Buenos Aires last week a million mourners, their tears still flowing after 15 days of national grief (LIFE, Aug. 11), lined streets banked with flowers and draped in somber crepe to give Eva Perón the funeral homage due a chief of state. In the congress building Dictator Juan Perón stood beside his wife's silver and cedar coffin as an archbishop said final prayers. Peronista henchmen from every branch of government swore "by the fatherland and by you, Eva Perón, to be loyal . . . to give our lives for Perón." A supreme court justice declared that Argentina had "lost . . . a sweet, soft-eyed magistrate."

Then, along a 23-block route (see following pages) Eva's body was carried to its temporary resting place, the union headquarters of Argentina's five million laborers, the "shirtless ones" for whose love, and votes, she had plundered the nation's economy. Within the month, across the nation which was re-naming streets, schools, one entire county, the city of La Plata and even a packing house in her memory, every wage earner except those foolhardy enough to protest would be assessed one day's earnings to pay for the national monument which will be Evita's final resting place and the descamisados' eternal shrine.

"Years of disappointment?
FORGET IT ALL!"

... can give you healthier-looking, more beautiful hair even when years of other hair care have failed

Men and women everywhere are calling this "The Minute Miracle." No wonder! It is changing the hair-care habits of millions and millions from coast to coast. Results proved in the happiness of all these customers enable us to make this statement...

"The most astounding, the most nation-sweeping promise ever made" ... to all men and women who wash their hair more than a half a dozen times a year ... to men and women who comb their hair with one hand and throw it away with the other ... to girls who beat their hair, heat their hair, treat their hair with everything from shellac to beer, only to find that all their struggles end in straggles!

Which are you? We've mentioned the millions who are now satisfied that they have found "the hair care to end all hair cares." We can also mention millions who spend millions of dollars to mistreat their hair. We'd like to give a lot of help to a lot of people now losing their hair through neglect.

If hair could feel pain ... you'd scream! If dandruff, falling hair, drying hair, splitting and cracking ends, were painful people would rush to hair specialists even as they get up nerve to rush to dentists. But, sadly, your hair has no feeling. It won't complain even when you kill it.

Can you "rub on something" and grow hair? If olive oil can grow hair, why is it used in face powders and soaps which we know won't grow hair? Mechanics and station men work in mineral oil and standard oil without changing hair growth. And alcohol! If alcohol could grow hair most men I know would have fur-lined stomachs.

Well, what are we going to do? Take a lesson from the one animal which grows hair like we do. That's the sheep. Sheep's hair keeps growing, like ours. When sheep get a hair cut, we get our wool. And did you ever notice the resemblance of sheep's hair to some human's? Rain and water make it curl even tighter. Now, the oil which conditions the sheep's hair is lanolin. The secret of good-looking human hair is natural oil very much like lanolin. So millions are gaining all the benefits lanolin can give human hair by using famous Formula 9.

So take a tip from millions! Get Charles Antell Formula 9. Follow the simple directions—use it on your hair. Brush, comb or "fix," your hair as usual. Take a look at your watch and take one minute. Quickly done. Take a look at your hair. Perfectly done. And NOW...

Ladies and Gentlemen!

HERE'S THE COMMERCIAL

Here's What I'm Promising
Here's What I'm Giving Away

A little minute ... but a big difference!

In order to get you to purchase Formula 9 right away, we're cutting the price of the regular size (90 days' supply for two people) to $2. And to make certain you don't use anything else on your hair while you try it, we give you ... yes, give you! a $1 bottle of our new lanolin shampoo. So use Formula 9, as directed, for 30 days. It must work ... it must give you healthier-looking, more beautiful hair. If your hair doesn't seem to you improved in every way we've led you to expect ... here's more than your money back. Keep the shampoo as a gift from Charles Antell. Return the Formula 9, or jar. We return your money without question. Our guarantee is unconditional. So go to your nearest drug, chain, or department store and get Formula 9 today.

During this introduction, you may purchase the large family size for only $3 and receive as a gift double the regular size of shampoo.

P.S. Your progressive barber or beauty shop can give you professional hair care with genuine Charles Antell Formula 9 and Shampoo.

When leaving an upper berth, should you—

- ☐ Dress completely
- ☐ Wear a robe
- ☐ Ring a bell

A treed kitten—that's how you feel! To save your neck, you can't get down unless you ring the bell that fetches the porter (with a ladder). It's okay to dress in the ladies' room. So you can wear your robe down the aisle, without feeling self-conscious. In any situation—at certain times, Kotex keeps you self-assured. Those flat pressed ends banish telltale outlines. And for extra comfort, there's your new Kotex belt, made with soft-stretch elastic. Non-twisting. Non-curling. Washable; dries pronto!

Should this summer's barefoot belle consider—

- ☐ Snakes
- ☐ A pedicure
- ☐ Poison ivy

Whether beachcombing, or dabbling in a babbling brook—your tootsies are showing! They'd better be well pedicured. Cut toenails short; straight across. Use lacquer to match your paw-paint, and pul-lease—repair chipped polish! Belles on their toes don't risk embarrassment. And they meet "calendar" needs with Kotex, for that safety center gives extra protection. Try all 3 absorbencies; see which suits you best.

Are you in the know?

If your Romeo's green-eyed, what to do?

- ☐ Stick to your knitting
- ☐ Keep him guessing

Your dreamboat's the jealous type? Making with the roving eye won't cure him. If you'd avoid feuds, date the sad lad solo; and stick to your knitting . . . no flirty business. Be kind to yourself, too, on days when comfort means a lot. Get the softness Kotex gives; it holds its shape, because this napkin's made to stay soft while you wear it.

More women choose KOTEX than all other sanitary napkins

Have you tried Delsey? Delsey is the new bathroom tissue that's safer because it's softer. A product as superior as Kotex . . . a tissue as soft and absorbent as Kleenex. (We think that's the nicest compliment there is.) Won't you try Delsey, next time?

WORLD'S FASTEST

New catamaran sails at 25 knots

This year a strange craft with candy-striped sails has been making sailors wonder and spectators pop their eyes at beaches near Santa Monica, Calif. A 36-foot catamaran built by W. P. Lear, the vessel breaks almost every rule of standard hull design and all speed records for sailing craft. Built like a sled with two runners instead of the conventional single hull, the "cat" hits a top speed of 25 knots, out-sailing anything except a sister ship in Hawaii. A smaller, 16-foot version of the boat is creating a West Coast "cat" craze (following page).

BEST TIME to condition your soil

Fall is the ideal season to condition your soil with Krilium*—moisture, rain and weather are generally more favorable—ground is more workable... Fall is also the season for setting out bulbs, for transplanting, for repairing bare spots in lawns.

Indoor growing, too, gets a renewed start—here Krilium finds year-round use, particularly with the introduction of the new 1-lb. handy shaker-top package—especially convenient for potted plants, flowers, window boxes.

Apply Krilium soil conditioner now. Your soil will be ready for easy working whenever you're ready for later planting—next week or next spring.

Quick facts about soil conditioning

1... Mere surface application of any soil conditioner will not break up hard, caked and crusted soil. It will not create good soil structure—soil still has to be broken up mechanically and by hand, before a conditioner can be effectively applied.

2... Krilium can be worked into the soil at the same time it is being broken up—only one double-effect operation is needed.

3... For best results, a soil conditioner should be worked in to root depth—3 to 6 inches for root crops such as carrots, beets, turnips; ½ inch or more for grasses, lawns.

4... Dry treatment is more effective because proper application depth can be accurately controlled—the user can see the light-colored powder as it is applied and worked in—can, therefore, be certain of adequate treatment. (Monsanto produces a wet-application formulation of Krilium which is satisfactory mainly where surface treatment is the only requirement.)

5... On the basis of square feet of effective treatment (the only sound way to figure cost) Krilium is the most economical soil conditioner available.

Two Sizes

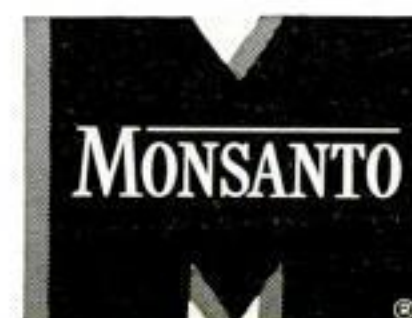

1-lb. canister with handy shaker top. Convenient for indoor use—potted plants, window boxes.

5-lb. canister. Convenient for indoor and outdoor use—lawns, gardens, shrubs, borders.

A CAT SHOWS OFF ITS SPEED

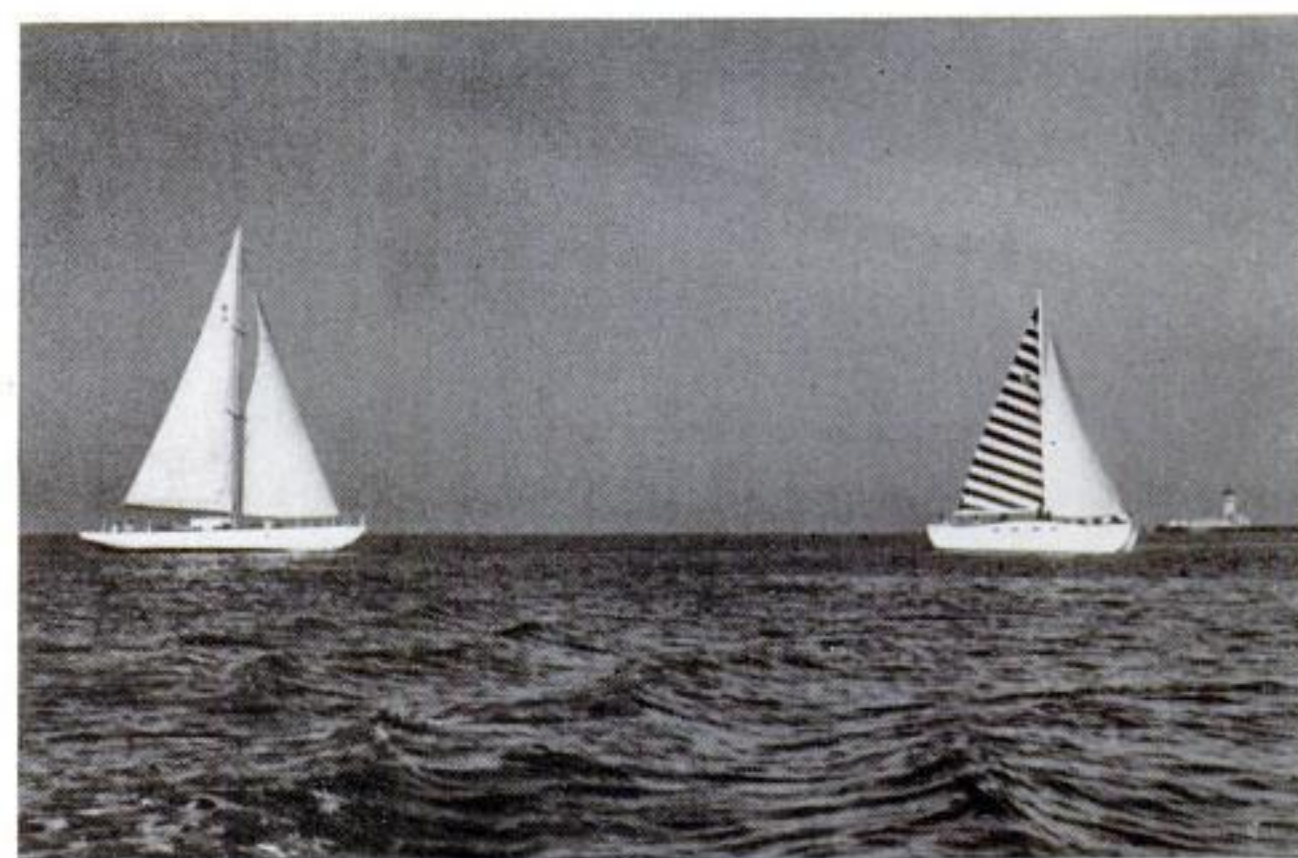

The catamaran was first developed centuries ago by the Polynesians. Placing two hollowed-out logs parallel to each other and separating them by a platform, they created a boat which could not be tipped over and which could easily be launched among the reefs. This year two West Coast boat manufacturers, Learcat and Malibu, have been making lucrative use of this primitive principle. The cat is almost impossible to capsize—unlike its only real challenger, the split-hulled Lake Michigan skow, it does not heel over in the quest for added speed. Despite this sacrifice for safety, a catamaran can easily outrace any conventional sailboat of comparable size (below).

OVERTAKING a conventional sailboat in race, the 36-foot catamaran displays its speed in a light breeze.

DRAWING AHEAD, catamaran, which can be managed by crew of two, leaves the yacht Topaz in its wake.

WAY OUT IN FRONT, catamaran streaks for finish line. Although Topaz was 20 feet longer and carried twice as much sail, cat proved easy winner.

Half a dozen different meals from the same ham!

This is really a picture of six wonderful meals—all made easily from this one tender, delicately smoked Armour Star Ham! For the first meal, serve it piping hot—with potato salad, perhaps. To bake the ham, wrap in inner wrapper, and place on rack in a shallow baking pan for 18-20 minutes per pound at 325° F. During last 15 minutes take ham from oven, remove wrapper, peel off rind, cover with crumb topping made by mixing $\frac{1}{4}$ cup bread crumbs, 1 cup brown sugar, 2 tablespoons fat and 2 tablespoons corn syrup. Then score ham and return to oven for 15 minutes more.

In a day or two, serve a cold ham supper. Make sliced ham sandwiches for lunch or a picnic. Cube some of ham for ham a la king or a cheese-and-ham rarebit. Serve it ground in a ham loaf—and don't forget to use the ham bone for soup!

The young lady pictured above is not being swallowed by a lipstickied whale, nor is she being fatally scorched. Instead, Dottie Mack is showing an ABC television audience how the heroine feels in a song called Kiss of Fire.

Miss Mack and a colleague, Wanda Lewis, are mute but able aides of a Cincinnati disk jockey named Paul Dixon. Carrying on a nightclub stunt made famous by the Bernard Brothers and Doodles and Spider, Dixon has phonograph records played off stage while he and the girls pretend to sing by moving their lips. This agreeable kind of fraud so appeals to the public that Dixon's show is one of but two disk jockey acts now seen on a TV network. Dixon has been a radio announcer, newscaster and record spinner for 12 years. But he did not become a celebrity until, on TV, he began supplementing his recorded song offerings with the blazing, wistful, or merely demented pictorial presentations shown here and on the next pages.

BETWEEN TOES

DANGER SIGNALS of Athlete's Foot warn you. Peeling, itching, cracks between toes are NOT normal. They may develop seriously into blisters, raw spots, painful infection. Use NP-27 at once and regularly to help guard your family's foot health, or for effective relief.

TRIPLE-ACTION makes NP-27 so effective: It kills the plant-like fungus (1) which is the usual cause of Athlete's Foot. NP-27 also destroys hard-to-kill spores, or "seeds" (2) from which the infecting "plants" may grow back. And it kills bacteria (3) which may cause or complicate the infection.

TREATMENT IS EASY NOW. Quick-acting NP-27 is pleasant to use; non-irritating; dries rapidly; doesn't stain skin. Buy NP-27 now. If you're not completely satisfied, your druggist will refund full purchase price. The Norwich Pharmaceutical Co., Norwich, N. Y. (NP-27 is available also in Canada.)

ON FIELD TRIP Paul Dixon and his faithful henchwomen teeter dizzily on the brink of a falls as they begin a telecast at Cincinnati's Coney Island.

BY A PAWNSHOP in a corner of the studio, Dixon portrays a man who hocks everything to keep his girl in style for record Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

IN THE STUDIO Dixon gaily hugs his Dottie and Wanda as they impersonate oldtime vaudeville troupers for song Toot, Toot, Tootsie Goodbye.

IN A FARMYARD setting Dixon and the girls make like country folk in accompaniment to the record of South African song, A-round the Corner.

COLLEGE SHOPS LURE STUDENTS WITH LOUDER COLORS, DAFTER HATS

When U.S. stores first set up college shops some 20 years ago, they regarded female undergraduates as advanced campers who were in the market mainly for name tapes and other girlish paraphernalia for going away from home. Since then the college girl has been recognized as one of a store's pickiest ready-to-wear customers, buying only if the price is right, the packing simple, the uses endless. Shown on these pages are some of this year's most-likely-to-succeed campus novelties. They indicate some changes from dark flannels and plaids to pastel velveteen and brighter print corduroy and felt, especially if rainproofed (above) for practicality. To team with shorts, now as entrenched on campuses as jeans, there are new loud sweaters and a wacky array of caps swiped from those worn by European college boys.

NOVELTY TOPS, checked corduroy ($12, Masket Bros.) and sweater with a wide turtleneck ($11, Greta Plattr), go with high socks, standard shorts in flannel ($13) and plaid ($15, both Evan-Picone).

DRESS SHIRT for date skirts or school shorts is the fanciest version so far of the man's tailored pink shirt which has been taken over by women. It costs $17 in velveteen, $9 in corduroy (Beacon Hill).

RAIN AND TRAIN COAT, useful either for slogging around campus or flitting about the city, is flashy water-repellent felt (Lawrence of London, $80) with cardigan neckline, big wooden tab buttons at back. →

JACQUARD KNIT is new in sweaters (Mirsa, $30). Outside corduroy satchel bag is $15 (Ronay).

DRINKING CAPS are sawtooth felt beanie ($10) and tasseled visor taken from Italian university students ($11), banded felt pillbox from Swiss fraternities ($5, all Madcaps).

The Most Beautiful Hair in the World is kept at its loveliest ... with Lustre-Creme Shampoo

When Loretta Young says . . . "I use Lustre-Creme Shampoo," you're listening to a girl whose beautiful hair plays a vital part in a fabulous glamour-career.

You, too, like Loretta Young, will notice a glorious difference in your hair, after a Lustre-Creme shampoo. Under the spell of its lanolin-blessed lather, your hair shines, behaves, is eager to curl. Hair dulled by soap abuse . . . dusty with dandruff, now is fragrantly clean.

Rebel hair is tamed to respond to the lightest brush touch. Hair robbed of its natural sheen now glows with renewed highlights. Lathers lavishly in hardest water . . . needs no special after-rinse.

No other cream shampoo in all the world is as popular as Lustre-Creme. For hair that behaves like the angels and shines like the stars . . . ask for Lustre-Creme, the world's finest shampoo, chosen for "the world's most beautiful hair"!

HIGHPOCKETS COOPER IN 'HIGH NOON'

In high-heeled boots and long, tight pants, his body taut and wary, his face creased by wind and work, the eternal sheriff goes down the eternal Western street, gunning for the bad guys. Nobody can do it with more authority than Gary Cooper, who has been in the business for 25 years (p. 79). The good man, shown in all his elongated glory at the right, stalks the empty streets whence all but him and the malefactors have fled.

This time the hunt is called High Noon, named for the hour at which Marshal Will Kane knows the train will disembark a criminal who has sworn to kill him. The townspeople and even the marshal's new bride turn aside when trouble comes—the man with the badge is left alone to re-establish law and order with his own gun and fists. Although High Noon has some defects, few recent Westerns have gotten so much tension and excitement into the classic struggle between good and evil.

OPEN DOOR of a respectable citizen's house leads only to the citizen's wife who lies to Kane by telling him that her craven husband has gone out.

FORMER FRIEND, a Mexican girl (Katy Jurado), tells Kane that the odds are against him and that if he had any sense he would get out of town.

THE DEPUTY (right), convinced that Kane is sure to be killed, tries to buy his marshal's badge, then to beat him up, gets a colossal beating himself.

25TH ANNIVERSARY FOR GARY COOPER

When Gary Cooper finished making High Noon in Hollywood last fall he was commemorating the release of his first big movie (above), The Winning of Barbara Worth, 25 years ago. Then, as now, Cooper was playing horse opera. Cooper took the archetypal cowboy character established by Owen Wister with The Virginian (below) and gave it his own embellishments. By some trick of nature he managed to look both shy and sheepish, fierce and valiant, and occasionally, in a quiet way, almost kittenish. Most commonly, he appears to be pondering philosophical truths while chewing a sassafras twig, and at times he has a nobility of bearing that is genuinely Lincolnesque. In his long career—Cooper is 51 now—he has played over 70 roles, including the Virginian himself in Hollywood's 1929 version of Owen Wister's great yarn.

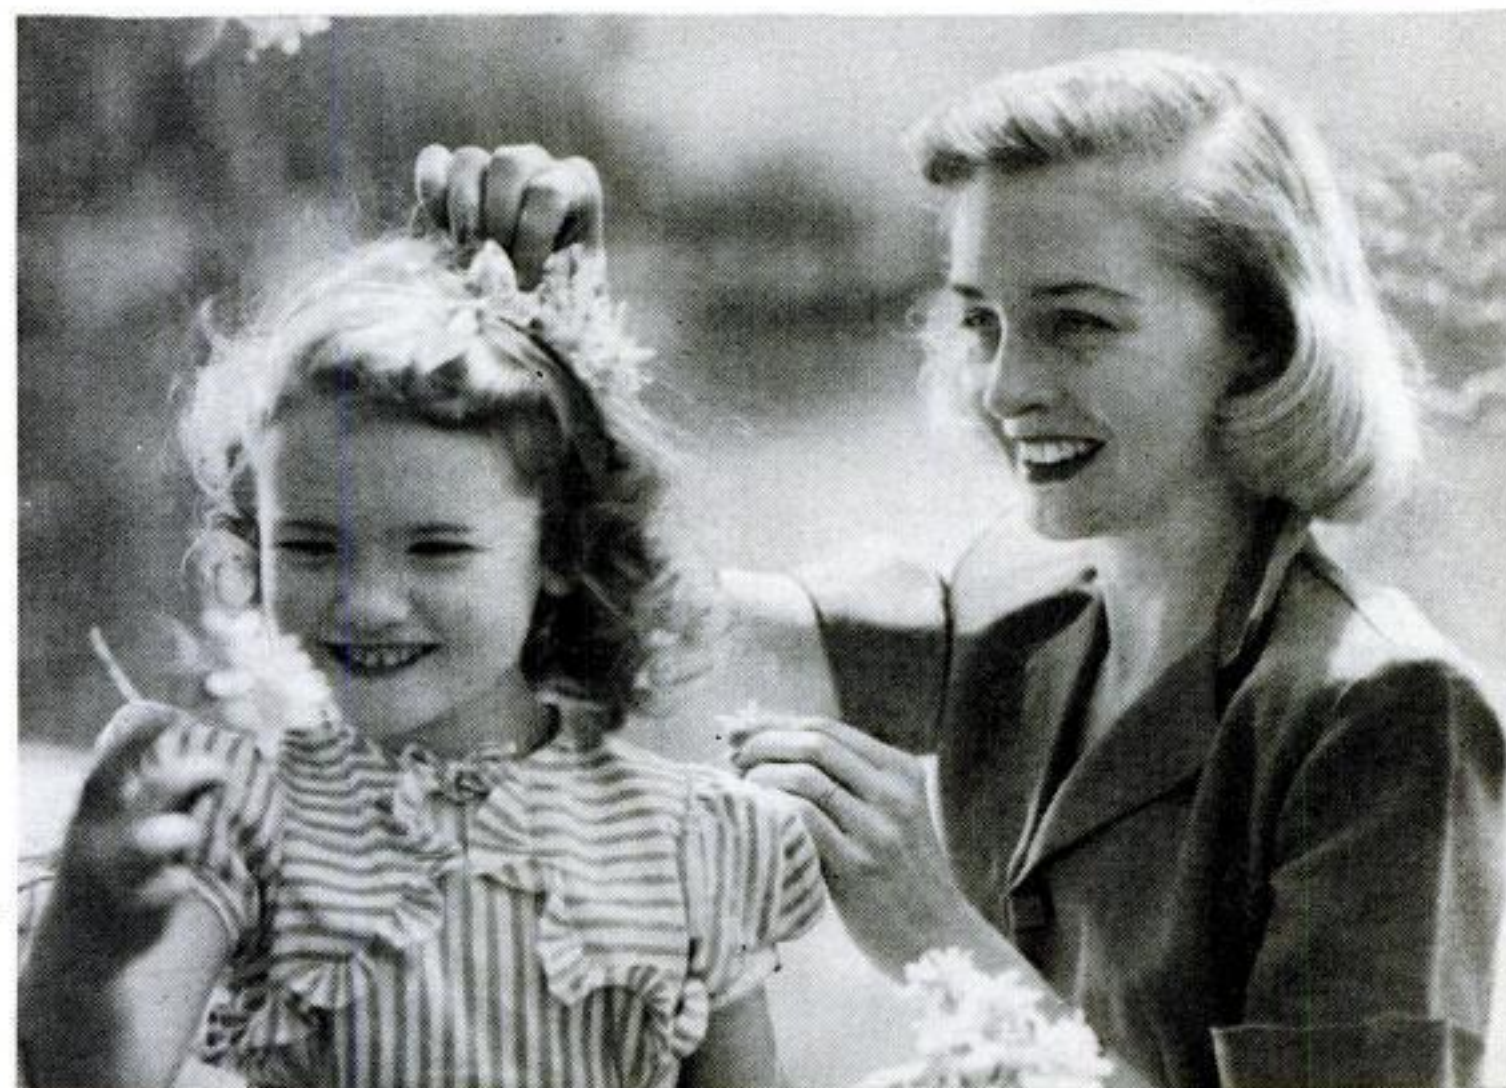

50TH BIRTHDAY FOR 'THE VIRGINIAN'

The first time anybody ever successfully made a hero of the U.S. cowboy was in 1902 when Owen Wister published his celebrated novel, The Virginian. Like prairie fire, Wister's story swept the world and the style for cowboy heroes and cowboy adventures forever after was set. Will Kane in High Noon is a blood brother of Wister's hero and High Noon's climax follows Wister's pattern of suspense in which the Virginian, against the wishes of his peace-loving sweetheart, stalked alone down the street of Medicine Bow, Wyo. to shoot it out with Trampas, a man who had vowed to do him in. In 1904 the novel became a Broadway hit, starring Dustin Farnum, and later a movie. The climactic scene from the play (above) has Farnum embracing his sweetheart while the wicked Trampas (Frank Campeau) bites the dust.

YOU'LL NEVER HAVE TO WORRY ABOUT A FLAT TIRE

when you have tubes with "Bulkheads"

SO FAR THIS YEAR, ONE OUT OF EVERY TEN MOTORISTS HAS BEEN STOPPED BY A FLAT TIRE. DON'T WAIT TILL YOU HAVE ONE, TOO!

Only Seiberling Tubes with patented "Bulkheads" give you complete protection against punctures...and they will fit your present tires, regardless of make!

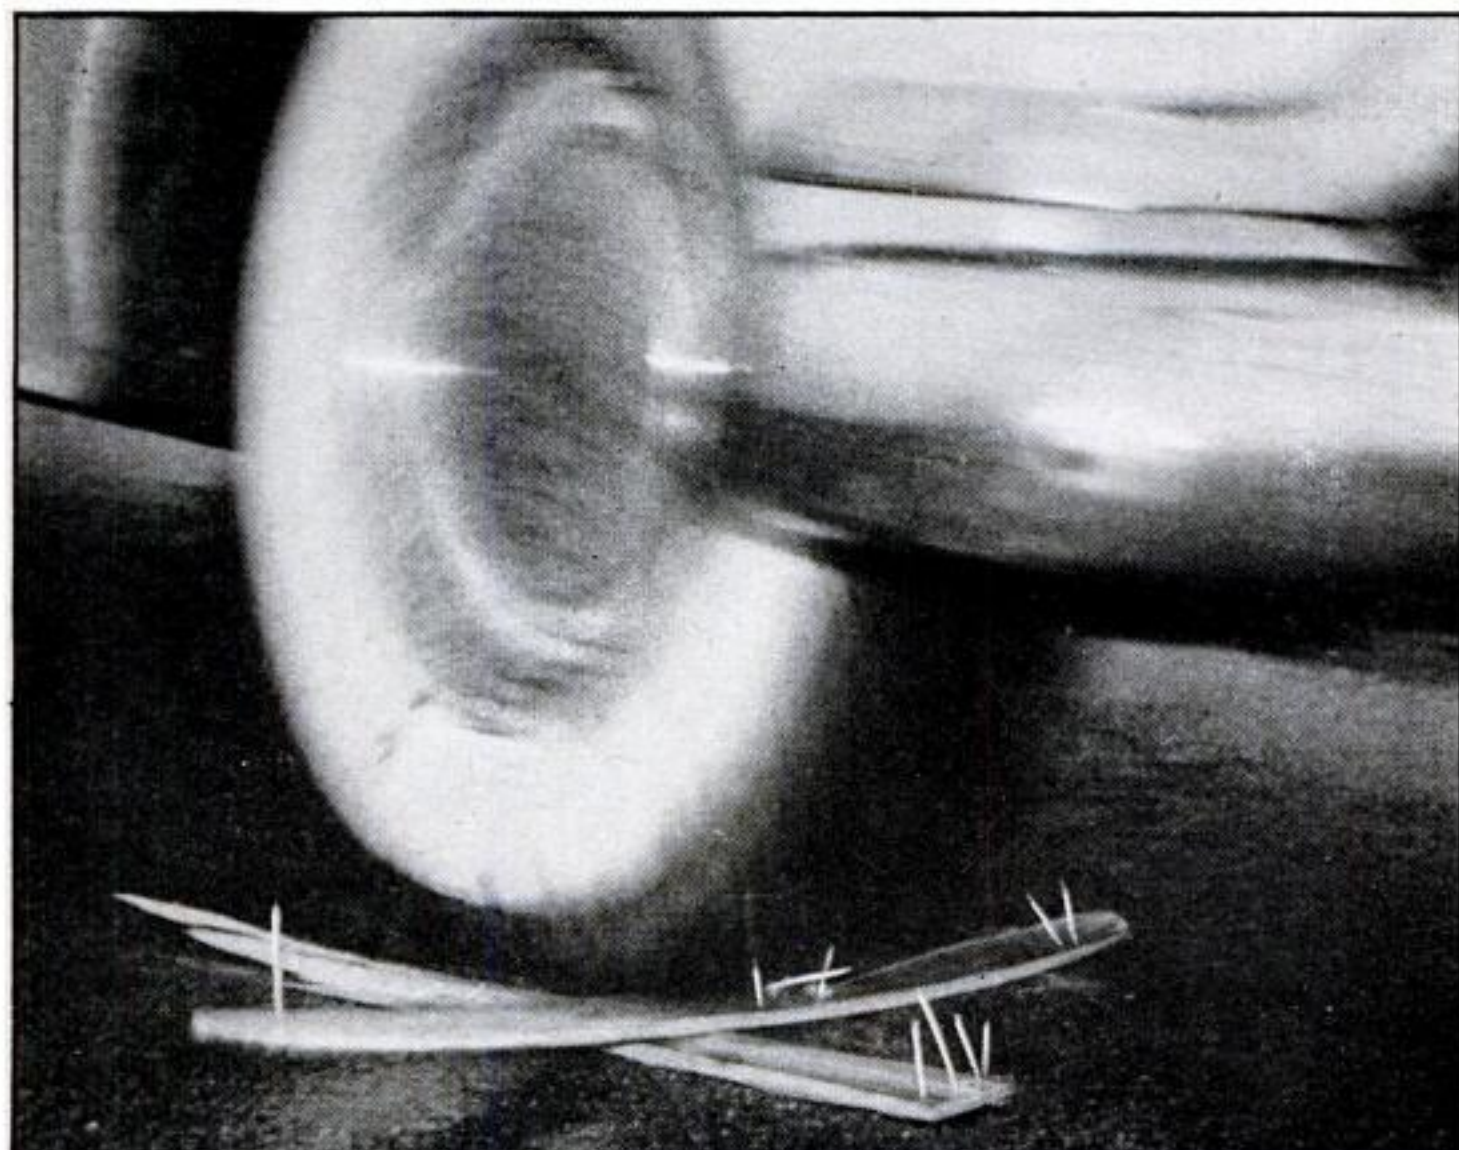

A small nail, a broken bottle, a chuck hole . . . and a flat tire! Punctures are often dangerous . . . always inconvenient . . . a waste of time (and money!).

Don't wait for trouble. Get puncture-sealing tubes. And when you buy them, get the best!

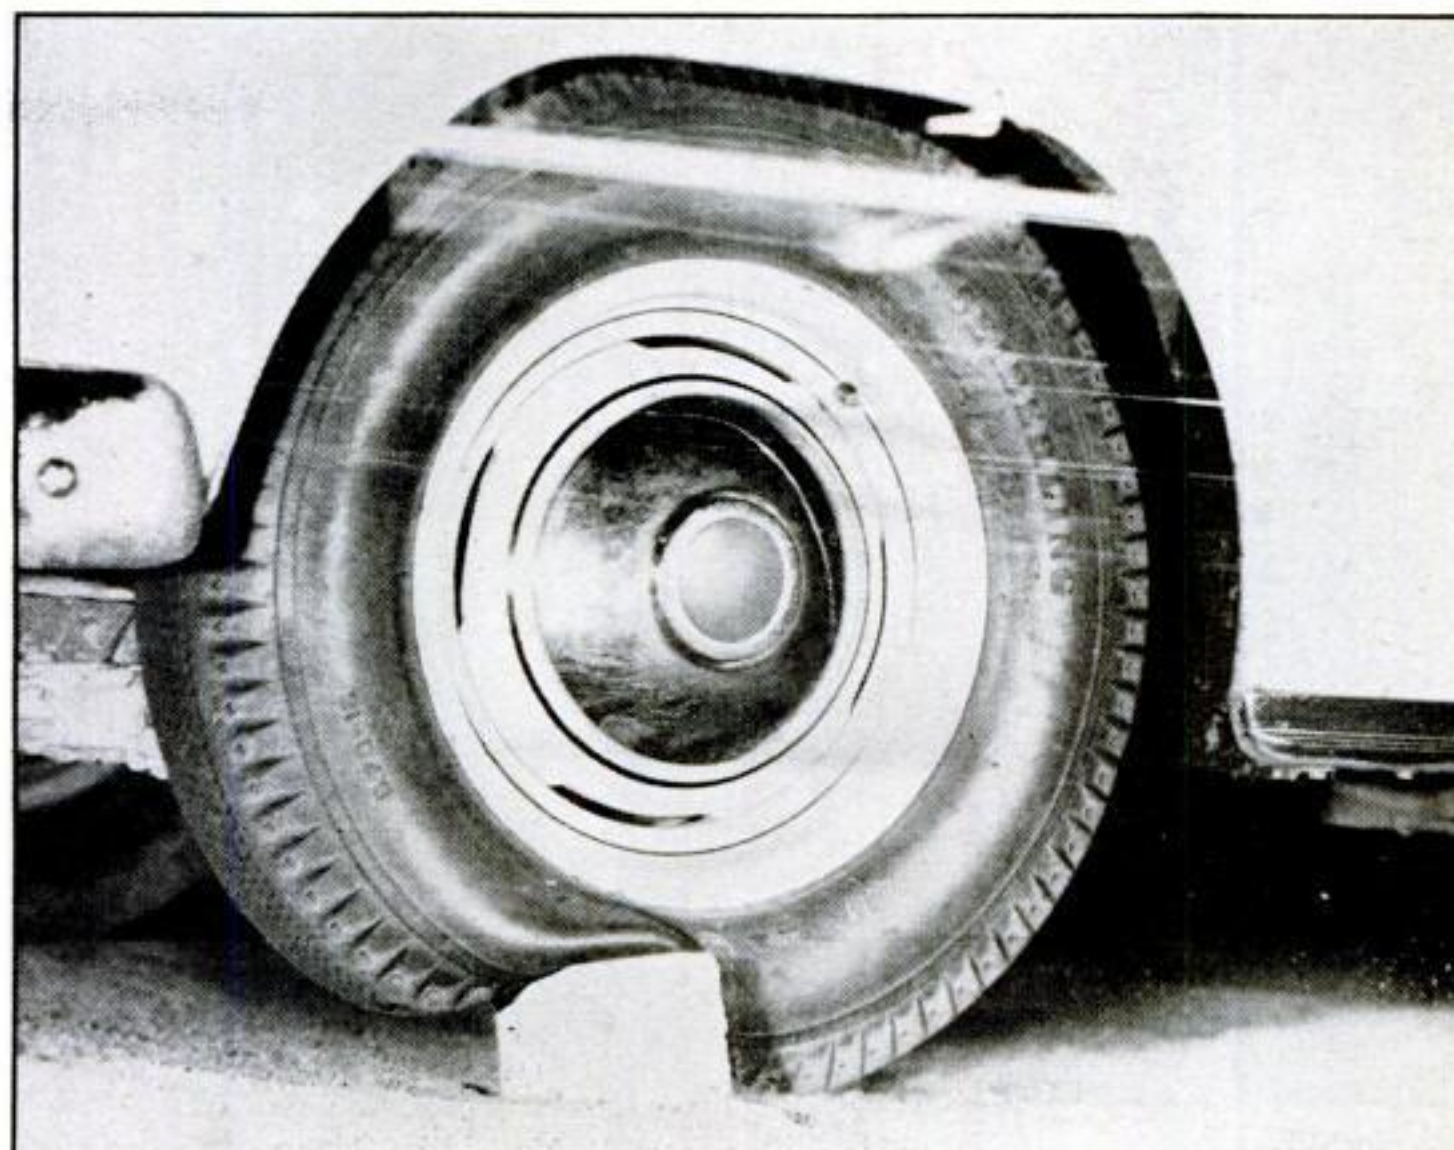

Seiberling Sealed-Air Tubes are the world's only tubes with "Bulkheads".

Filled with soft, puncture-sealing gum, "Bulkheads" give added strength, extra protection. This patented construction makes Sealed-Air Tubes outlast several sets of tires!

Give yourself and your family this lasting insurance against flat tires. Then drive any place, any time, without the slightest worry about punctures or tire trouble!

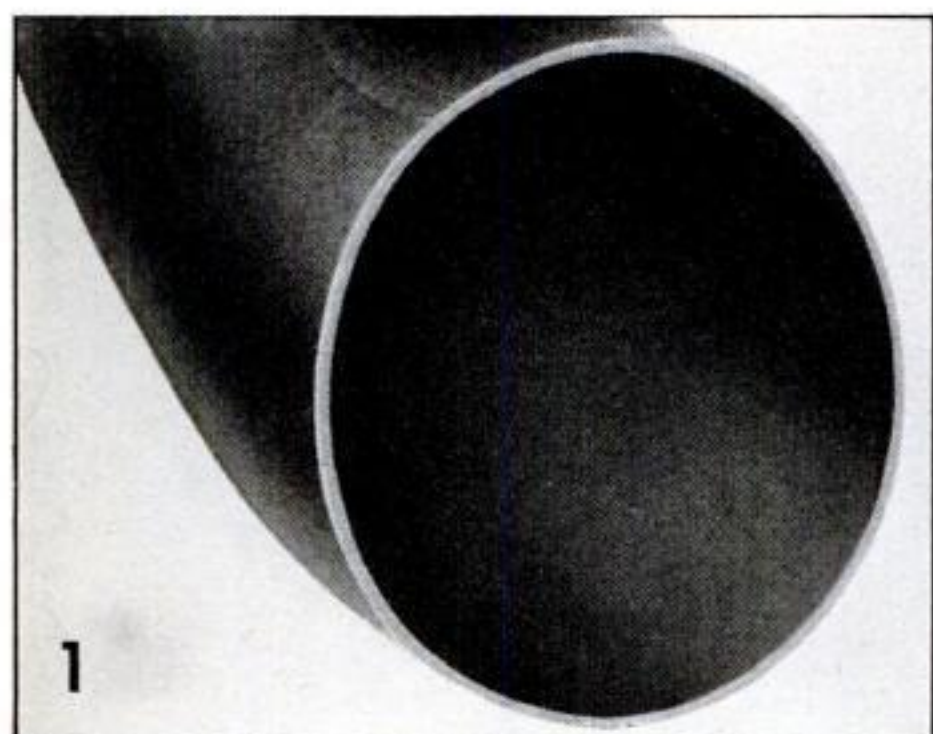

A FLAT TIRE IS EXPENSIVE. Even a small nail can puncture a tire. Repairs are costly . . . new tires are even more so. Riding on a good tire that's flat for even half a block may ruin it. Seiberling Sealed-Air tubes will keep your tires from going flat . . . save you money!

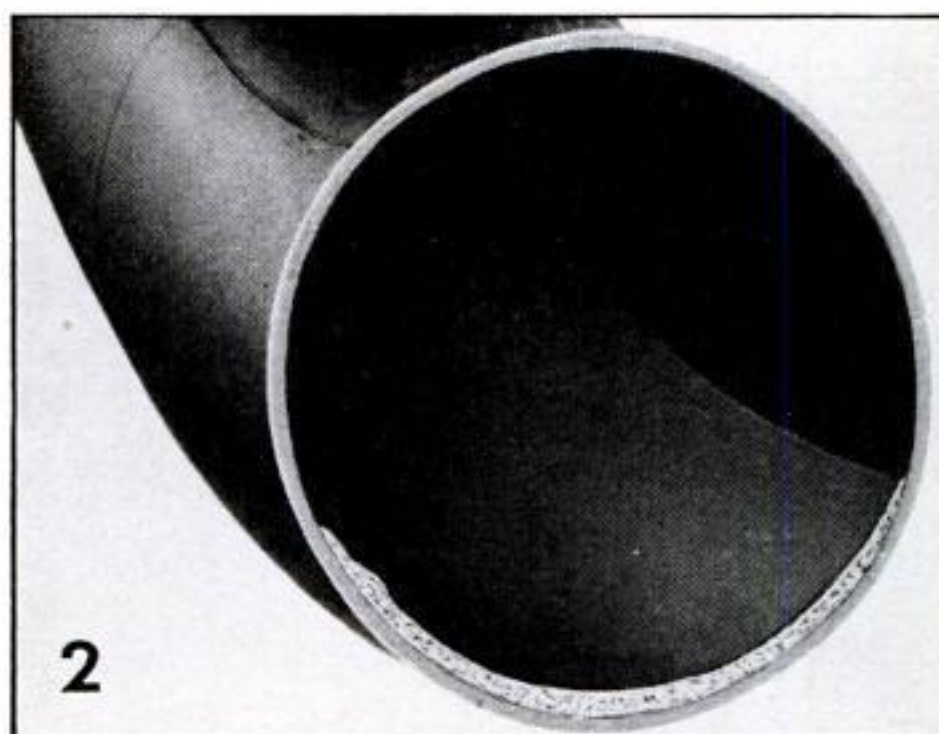

LOOK AT THE BEATING tires take. This stroboscopic photograph of a fully-inflated tire hitting a brick at 40 m.p.h. shows another reason why it's wise to equip your car with Seiberling Sealed-Air Tubes. They help protect you against blowouts caused by bruised or broken sidewalls.

Look at these 3 pictures:
SEE AT A GLANCE WHY "Bulkheads" MAKE Sealed-Air
THE SAFEST PUNCTURE-SEALING TUBE YOU CAN BUY!

REGULAR TUBE... is just a single thickness of rubber. Puncture it, and all the air escapes immediately. This sudden loss of air can throw your car out of control... might cause a serious accident. That's why so many motorists are replacing regular tubes with puncture-sealing tubes.

ORDINARY PUNCTURE-SEALING TUBE... has an added thickness of puncture-sealing gum. But the gum can become soft from the heat of driving. This often results in displacing the gum, throwing the tube out of balance and destroying its puncture-sealing effectiveness.

TO REALLY PLAY SAFE, get Seiberling Sealed-Air Tubes... the world's only puncture-sealing tubes with patented BULKHEADS. Only with BULKHEADS can you be assured of maximum protection against punctures and added protection against blowouts.

MAKING A MOBILE, Calder clips scrap of aluminum into leaflike shape for one of his new works.

Calder

HIS GYRATING 'MOBILE' ART WINS INTERNATIONAL FAME AND PRIZES

From the ropes, wires, metal clippers, paint cans and vises that make a gay jumble of the studio above, Alexander Calder has devised a fancifully original form of sculpture which has made him famous on every continent and this summer won him a top prize at the international art exhibition in Venice. Calder's sculpture, concocted of such unlikely materials as aluminum, wire, wood, bones, broken glass, bed springs and feathers, is distinguished by an even more remarkable feature—it moves. With the slightest whiff of air or jostle of an elbow, the varied objects of the sculpture, suspended tenuously on wires, tremble and twist in languid gyrations.

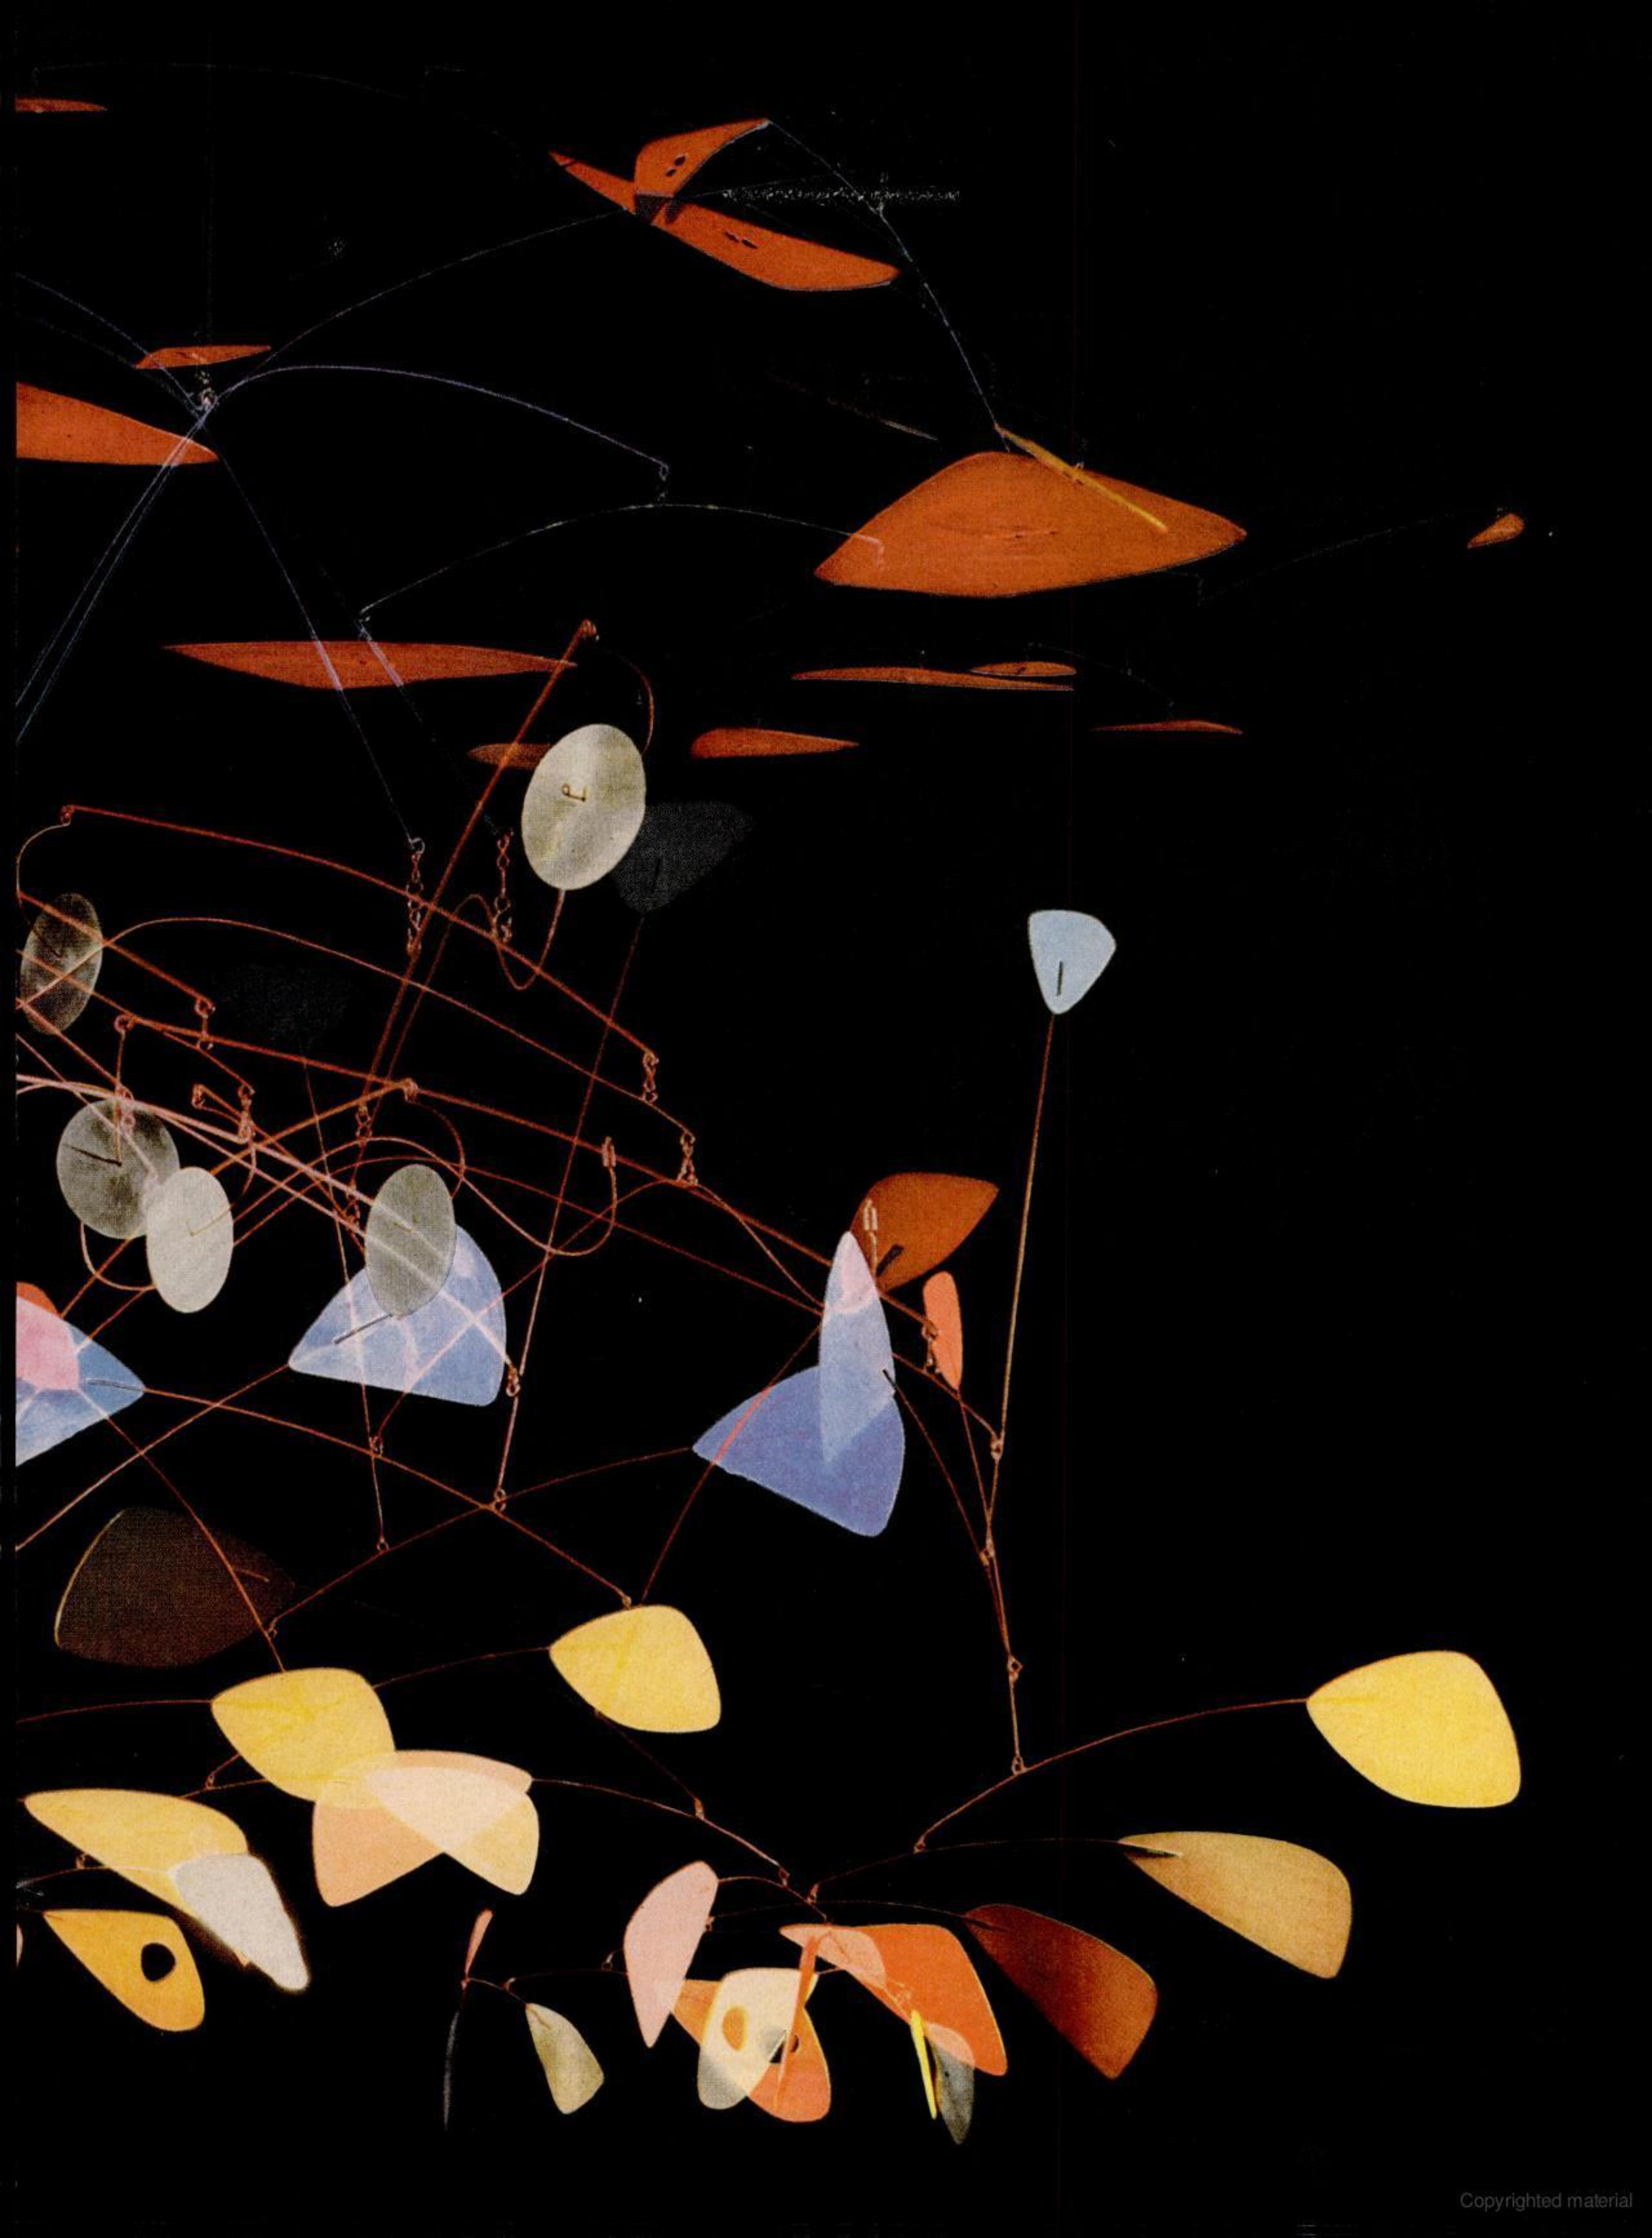

Because of this distinctive feature, Calder's creations are called "mobiles," a name invented especially for his work by the Dada painter, Marcel Duchamp (LIFE, April 28), and now attached to the whole species of oscillating sculpture which Calder's widespread admirers and imitators have spawned. Calder, who has been tinkering with wires and gadgets since he was 8, made his first mobile about 20 years ago. He has also invented galloping toy animals, wire circus performers, mobile stage sets, and a static variety of abstract sculpture known as "stabiles." Today at 54, with his work in museums, private collections, hotels and restaurants from Hawaii to Poland, Calder still puts in an 8-hour day in his studio, conjuring up new shapes and tricks for his animated sculpture.

This jangling pattern of wires, metal leaves and gongs is a multiple exposure photograph of a Calder mobile in four stages of motion. The exposures were taken at 10-second intervals as the mobile, which consists of 18 leaves, two brass disks and two clappers, moved slowly within its 6-foot radius. The brass disks, which sound off like gongs when they meet with the metal clappers, are the latest added attraction to Calder's work. "I got tired of just plain mobiles and stables," he says, "and decided to make a little noise for myself."

MOBILES AND STABLES were designed by Calder for French play, Nuclea, which opened in Paris in May. To dramatize theme of atomic warfare, mobiles were hung like portentous clouds above towering stables, which symbolize war machines. Soldiers' helmets resembling Martian gear were also made by Calder.

AT NINE Calder drew a gleeful portrait of himself making toys out of pieces of wood. At right is the 75¢ pair of pliers which started him on his way.

A LIVE WIRE WITH PLIERS

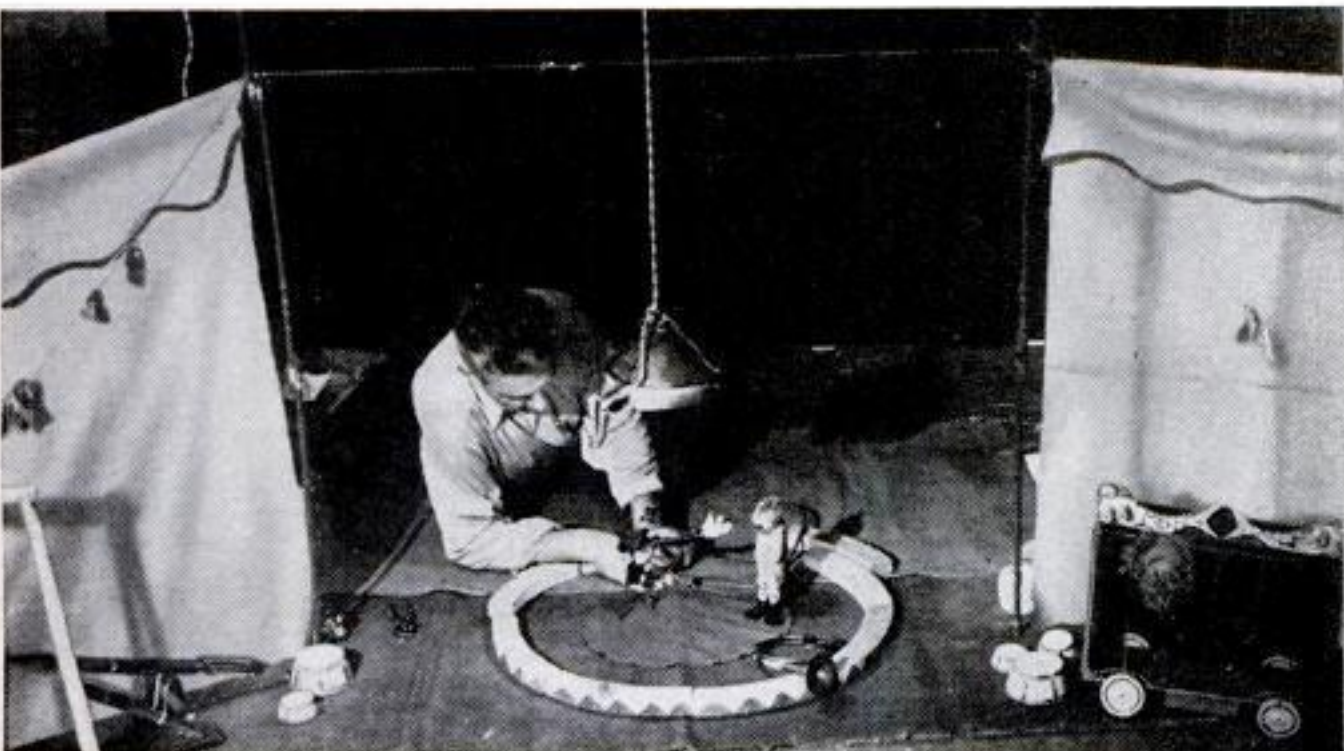

Sandy Calder's career began with a pair of 75¢ pliers. They were a Christmas present from his sister in 1906 and Calder, then 8, quickly put them to use twisting pieces of wire into jewelry for his sister's dolls. Since then he has owned some 50 pairs and seldom ventures anywhere without one in his pocket. Such an affinity would seem more fitting for a mechanic than a sculptor and in those days Calder was more inclined to be the former. His grandfather, Alexander Milne Calder, was a sculptor, known chiefly for his statue of William Penn atop the City Hall in Philadelphia. His father, A. Stirling Calder, was also a sculptor and his mother was a painter. Between the two, Calder was kept busy as a model and one childhood statue of him clad in a bearskin now reposes in the Metropolitan Museum. Quite naturally Calder rebelled against art and in 1915 he entered Stevens Institute of Technology in Hoboken, N.J.

When he graduated, he went through a rapid succession of jobs, working as draftsman for a utility company in New York, as engineer for a window-sash firm in Ohio, adviser for a lumber magazine in St. Louis and efficiency expert for a department store in Brooklyn. "It was a race between being bounced and quitting," he remembers. In 1922 Calder hired out as a fireman on a ship going to the West Coast and got a job in Washington running a store in a lumber camp. This occupation gave him time to study the scenery which in turn provoked him to paint. Before long he was heading East again to study art.

At the Art Students League in New York Calder studied with George Luks and John Sloan, and in his spare time got a job sketching athletes and dancers for the National Police Gazette. This led in 1925 and 1926 to assignments at the circus where Calder sketched the menagerie and made notes on the equestrian and aerial acts. Within two years these studies were to start him on his way to fame.

In the spring of 1926, at the age of 27, Calder got the yen for Paris. With the promise of $75 a month from his mother, he worked his way across the ocean painting the decks of a freighter and settled down on the Left Bank. By the following year almost everybody in the art and literary circles had heard of Calder and, more particularly, of his circus. During solitary hours in his room overlooking Montparnasse, Calder had devised from pieces of wire, felt, cork and wooden spools an array of miniature circus performers—trapeze artists, dancers, clowns, animals. These he set up in a small tanbark ring laid out on his floor and, with the aid of springs, strings and the whirling of an egg-beater, he made the dancers shimmy, the clowns tumble, aerialists fly through the air and horses trot briskly around the ring. Notables like Jean Cocteau, Frederick Kiesler, the painters Pascin and Foujita, came to crack peanuts and watch the two-hour performance which Calder announced in growling French and accompanied with old phonograph music.

With the invention of his circus a new creative field opened up for Calder. A friend suggested he try modeling a large figure in wire, thereby launching the artist on a series of wiry portraits of celebrities like Josephine Baker which were straightway exhibited in Paris, Berlin and New York. In 1927 a toy manufacturer from Oshkosh, Wis. commissioned Calder to turn his animals into wooden toys for children. Soon he was doing a sizable business in leaping kangaroos, skating bears and fish with eyes that rolled and tails that wiggled.

During these years Calder lived mostly in Paris but from time to time he came back to the U.S. to pick up a commercial job or two. On one such excursion he met a beautiful young girl from Boston who caught his eye because "her hair stood on end like Medusa's." She was Louisa James, grandniece of Novelist Henry and Philosopher William James. Two years later they were married.

Nineteen thirty was an important year for Calder. In Paris a friend took him to see the Dutch abstractionist, Piet Mondrian, whose severely geometricized paintings of straight lines and colored rectangles covered the walls of his tidy studio. Calder was impressed, but he was also bothered. "It would be nice," he said, "if the shapes moved." Mondrian frowned at the idea. But Calder went home and tried to work it out.

His first attempts were abstract wire designs which vibrated from stationary bases. Then he hit on the scheme of making spheres of contrasting sizes and colors move up and down the wires at varying speeds. These motorized abstractions were exhibited in 1931 and drew quick praise from the machine-minded French painter, Fernand Léger, who hailed Calder as a master "of reticent and silent beauty" who "is serious without seeming to be." The next year he turned out 15 motorized sculptures, but in the process he decided that their movements were too restricted, their patterns too stereotyped. To remedy this Calder decided to rely on the wind. Constructing his mobiles along the lines of fishing tackle combined with dangling trapezes, he produced a free and balanced creation which swung and bobbed with the least breath of air.

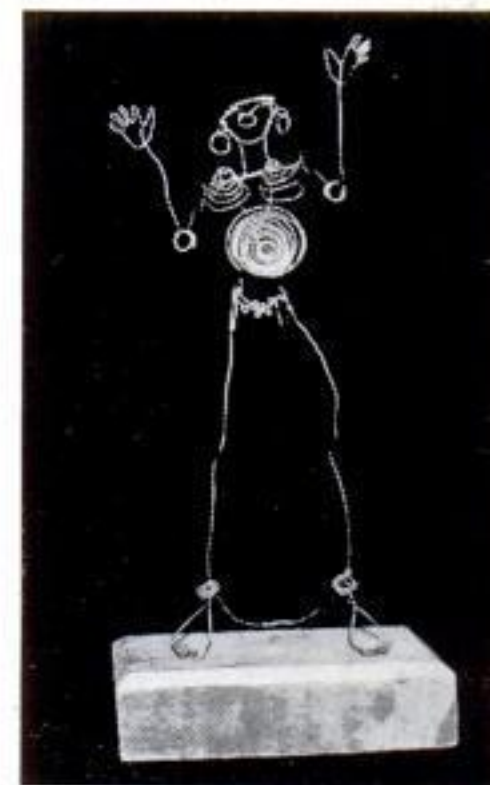

In 1933 Calder left France, where he had become known as "the king of wire," and returned to America. After four years of comparative obscurity, he was invited back to France to design a fountain for the Spanish pavilion at the Paris Exposition. Since the other artists decorating the pavilion were Spaniards, Calder billed himself as "Calderón de la Fuente" and proceeded to construct a circular steel basin into which flowed a stream of mercury that struck and set in motion a suspended mobile. This fountain became a top attraction of the Exposition and two years later Calder was asked to design a water ballet fountain for the New York World's Fair.

WIRY COSMOS, in Modern Museum, is motorized.

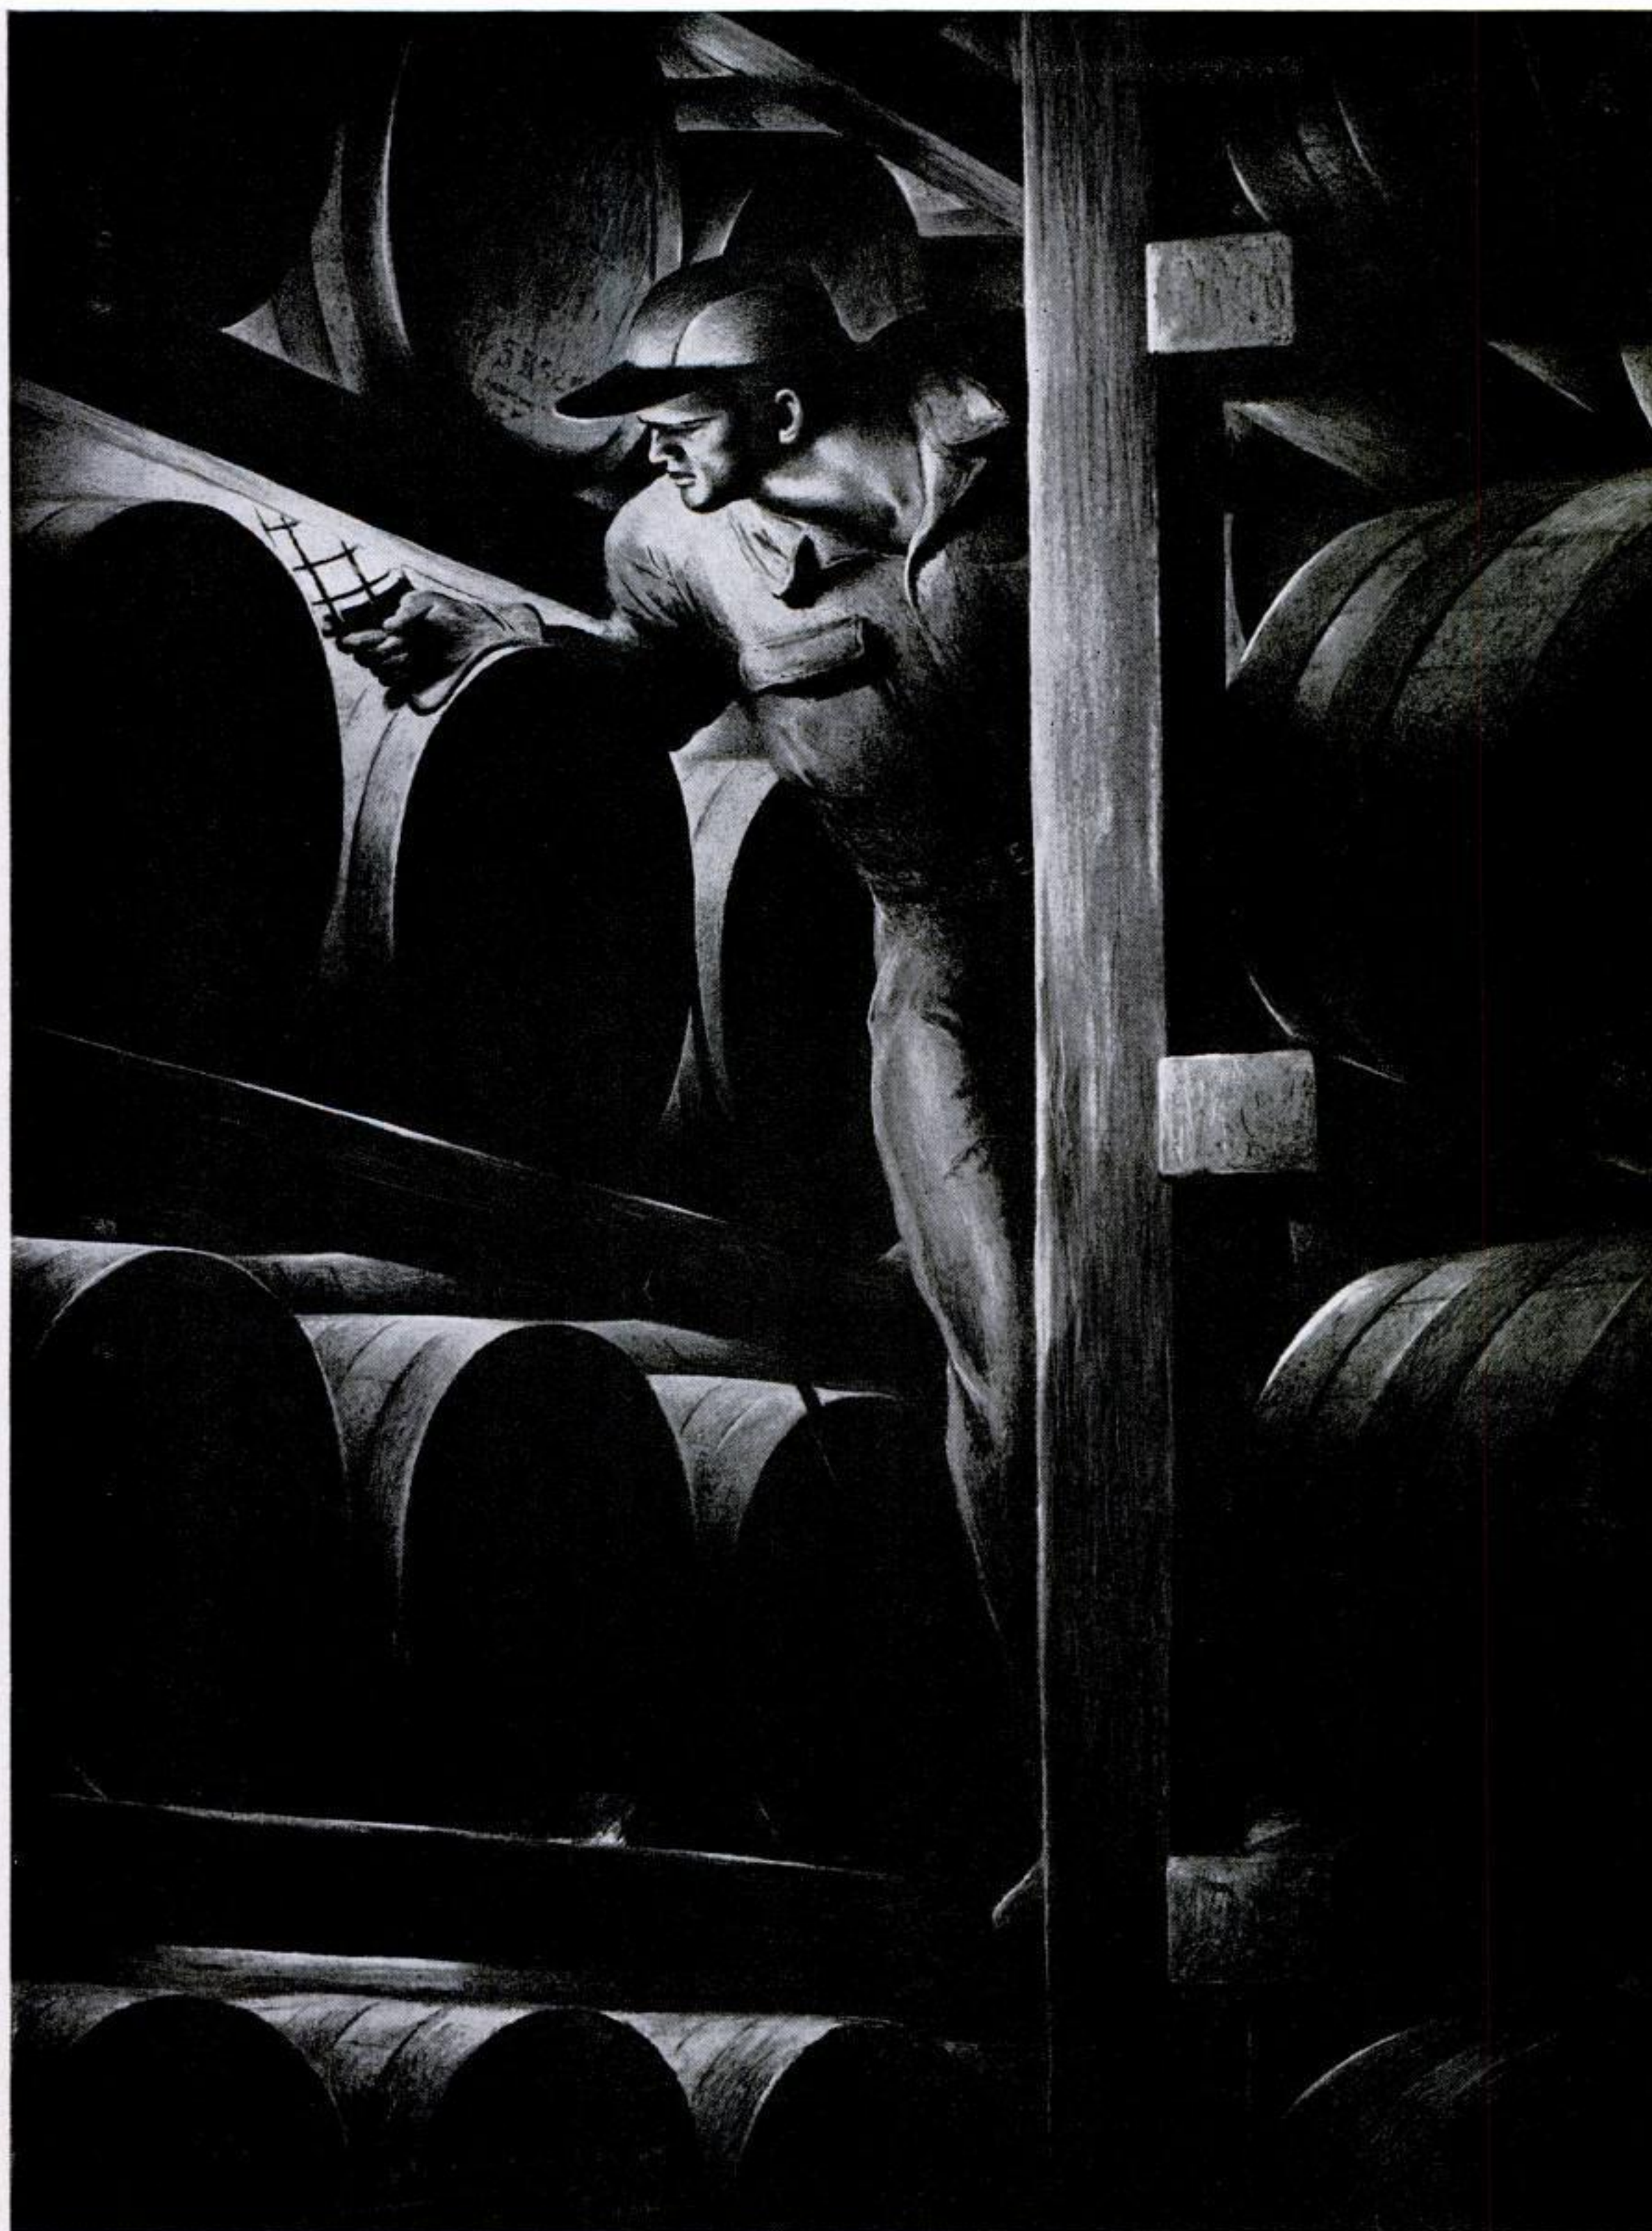

These art and engineering feats lent prestige and a note of practicality to Calder's playfully suspect creations, and American collectors and museums began to take a more respectful view of his work. During the '30s, the Calders had managed to get by on funds from scattered sales and commissions, supplemented by a small income of Louisa's. In the '40s, Calder's sculpture began to catch on. By 1950 a kind of peak in recognition came when the Massachusetts Institute of Technology honored the engineer-turned-artist with a huge retrospective show that drew delighted praise from professors and sober theories from students, who believed the motion of the mobiles could "all be boiled down to elliptical integrals."

With his burgeoning popularity, life has become less simple for

WIRY SINGER, Josephine Baker, wiggles in the wind.

He's a baby sitter for barrels

Up and down the great stacks of whiskey barrels that stretch for miles through the warehouse, trouble-shooters make their rounds.

They are the special teams that constantly patrol every foot of Schenley's vast warehouses, making certain that all is well. Barrels tight and sound. Surroundings spotless and dry. "Climate" just right for slow, steady, aging of the sleeping whiskey.

Their hunt doesn't often turn up trouble. You see, the barrels are sturdy and solid, because Schenley makes its own to insure their quality. And the warehouse air is kept warm, clean and fresh, the way whiskey likes it.

Still, the trouble-shooters keep a constant watch, "just in case." Babying barrels is extra effort, maybe, but an important part of the complete network of quality controls which guard Schenley whiskies from the time the grain is grown until—years later—the whiskey is in your glass.

This is Schenley's way of making certain that you get the utmost enjoyment in every drop of every drink. Schenley Distillers, Inc., New York, N. Y.

CALDER CONTINUED

Calder. Whenever he has a large show, he generally has to go along with his sculptures to assemble them properly. In the early days when he was making wire figures the job was easier. In 1928 a group at Harvard invited him to exhibit his work and arranged to meet him at the train with some cars to convey the sculpture to the gallery. When the train pulled in, out stepped Calder with some pliers in his hand and a roll of wire slung over his shoulder. Setting up shop in a student's room, he proceeded to twist the wire into enough shapes for a complete show.

When he isn't trotting after his shows, Calder stays close to his Roxbury, Conn. home. In his studio he turns out about 40 sculptures a year, ranging in height from three inches to 15 feet and priced at $150 to $3,000. Calder manages to sell about half of his yearly output; the rest he strews around his house, strings up in his studio or stows away, disassembled, in a "coffin." The whole studio is rigged up like a circus tent with an elaborate system of ropes and pulleys which enable Calder to get at any aerial act he wants.

In spite of the fact that he is often labeled a machine-age sculptor, Calder has only a grindstone and a drill that are run by motor. Some of his implements might be found in any layman's tool chest: hammers, files, vises, metal clippers—but there is a distinctive assortment Calder has designed for his own needs: a wire straightener, a wire twister, a device for locating the center of gravity of a metal shape. Calder believes in working whenever possible with hand equipment. "If you get sold on mechanization your work becomes manufactured instead of inventive and imaginative." Because of this he works with rivets and twisted wire and only resorts to welding when he is making a heavy stable for out-of-doors.

While daytime is given over to art and artifacts, nighttime at the Calders generally brings a splurge of music and high jinks. Sandy has a boisterous passion for dancing. A 6-foot, 200-pounder, he lumbers around like a dancing bear, inventing his own steps, sometimes jouncing a partner with him (once he broke a girl's ankle). Louisa Calder provides the music, bending impassively over her accordion. The contrast between the two was pointed up by a friend who remarked, "Louisa's stabile. She leaves the mobility to Sandy."

The Calders have two daughters, Sandra, 17, and Mary, 13. They maintain an air of grownup tolerance toward their obstreperous, boyish father. Both girls have tried their hand at mobiles—Sandra producing a rather dangerous variety from splintered glass—but the whole family prefers the elder Calder's handiwork and violently protests whenever he ships any of it away for a show.

Critics and other artists share their enthusiasm. Scholarly books have been written about Calder. Poems ("I salute you, forger of giant dragonflies") have been dedicated to him. He is the subject of an outstanding art film. Léger calls him "the greatest living American artist." Other artists like Picasso and Braque are equally admiring. "Why not?" says Sculptor Hans Arp. "He is not in competition with us. Who else can make mobiles?"

Actually almost everybody else has tried. The public has been steadily bombarded with fish mobiles (LIFE, Dec. 18, 1950), sun mobiles, Christmas mobiles and a French brand labeled "balanciles." But Calder is still in the lead, developing new mobiles with gongs, wire towers bedangled with miniature paintings, and exotic mobile birds fashioned from coffee and tobacco tins. One such bird bears the words "only only" on its wobbling tail—an appropriate motto for all Calder's work, for only only Calder can make a mobile masterpiece.

HOW TO SET MODERN

PURISTS have called the automobile a horseless carriage with bulging "jello-mold" exterior. But now—now Lincoln is ready to grace your life with a completely new concept of the fine car. For Lincoln makes your driving as supremely modern as your glass-walled home. Lincoln lets you take modern living with you.

You take the look of today's ground-hugging homes—a clean and whittled look, with every sweeping line devoted to duty. You take the deep comfort and the exciting design of a living room meant for living, with the most dramatic interiors on wheels. You live and drive behind huge expanses of glass—up to 3,271 square inches!—with low-sweeping hood and easily seen fenders.

Above all, you handle this blithe spirit with astonishing ease. Beneath that low hood is the new overhead valve Lincoln V-8 engine, with more power than you may ever need. At your finger-

He's a private man in a public spot

THE NAME might not mean a thing to you. You rarely see his picture in the paper.

But you can get a look at him, if you're interested, riding home a little tired on the trolley, reading his newspaper.

You can catch him any noontime in a restaurant somewhere in Washington, eating the dollar-and-a-quarter lunch.

Or, some warm week-end, stand on a highway leading out of the capital and watch for a '49 Chevvy with a dent in the right rear fender. That's him taking the family out for a picnic.

Get a good long look at him. He works for you. He's the man who looks after the hard daily business of your democracy.

Maybe two hundred thousand farmers picked him to represent them in Congress, because he knows their kind of life, their kind of problems. Or maybe he's an expert at atomic defense. Maybe he's a whiz at breaking codes. Maybe he knows more about New England fisheries than any other man alive. He might be an economist, a lawyer, a statistician, a scientist.

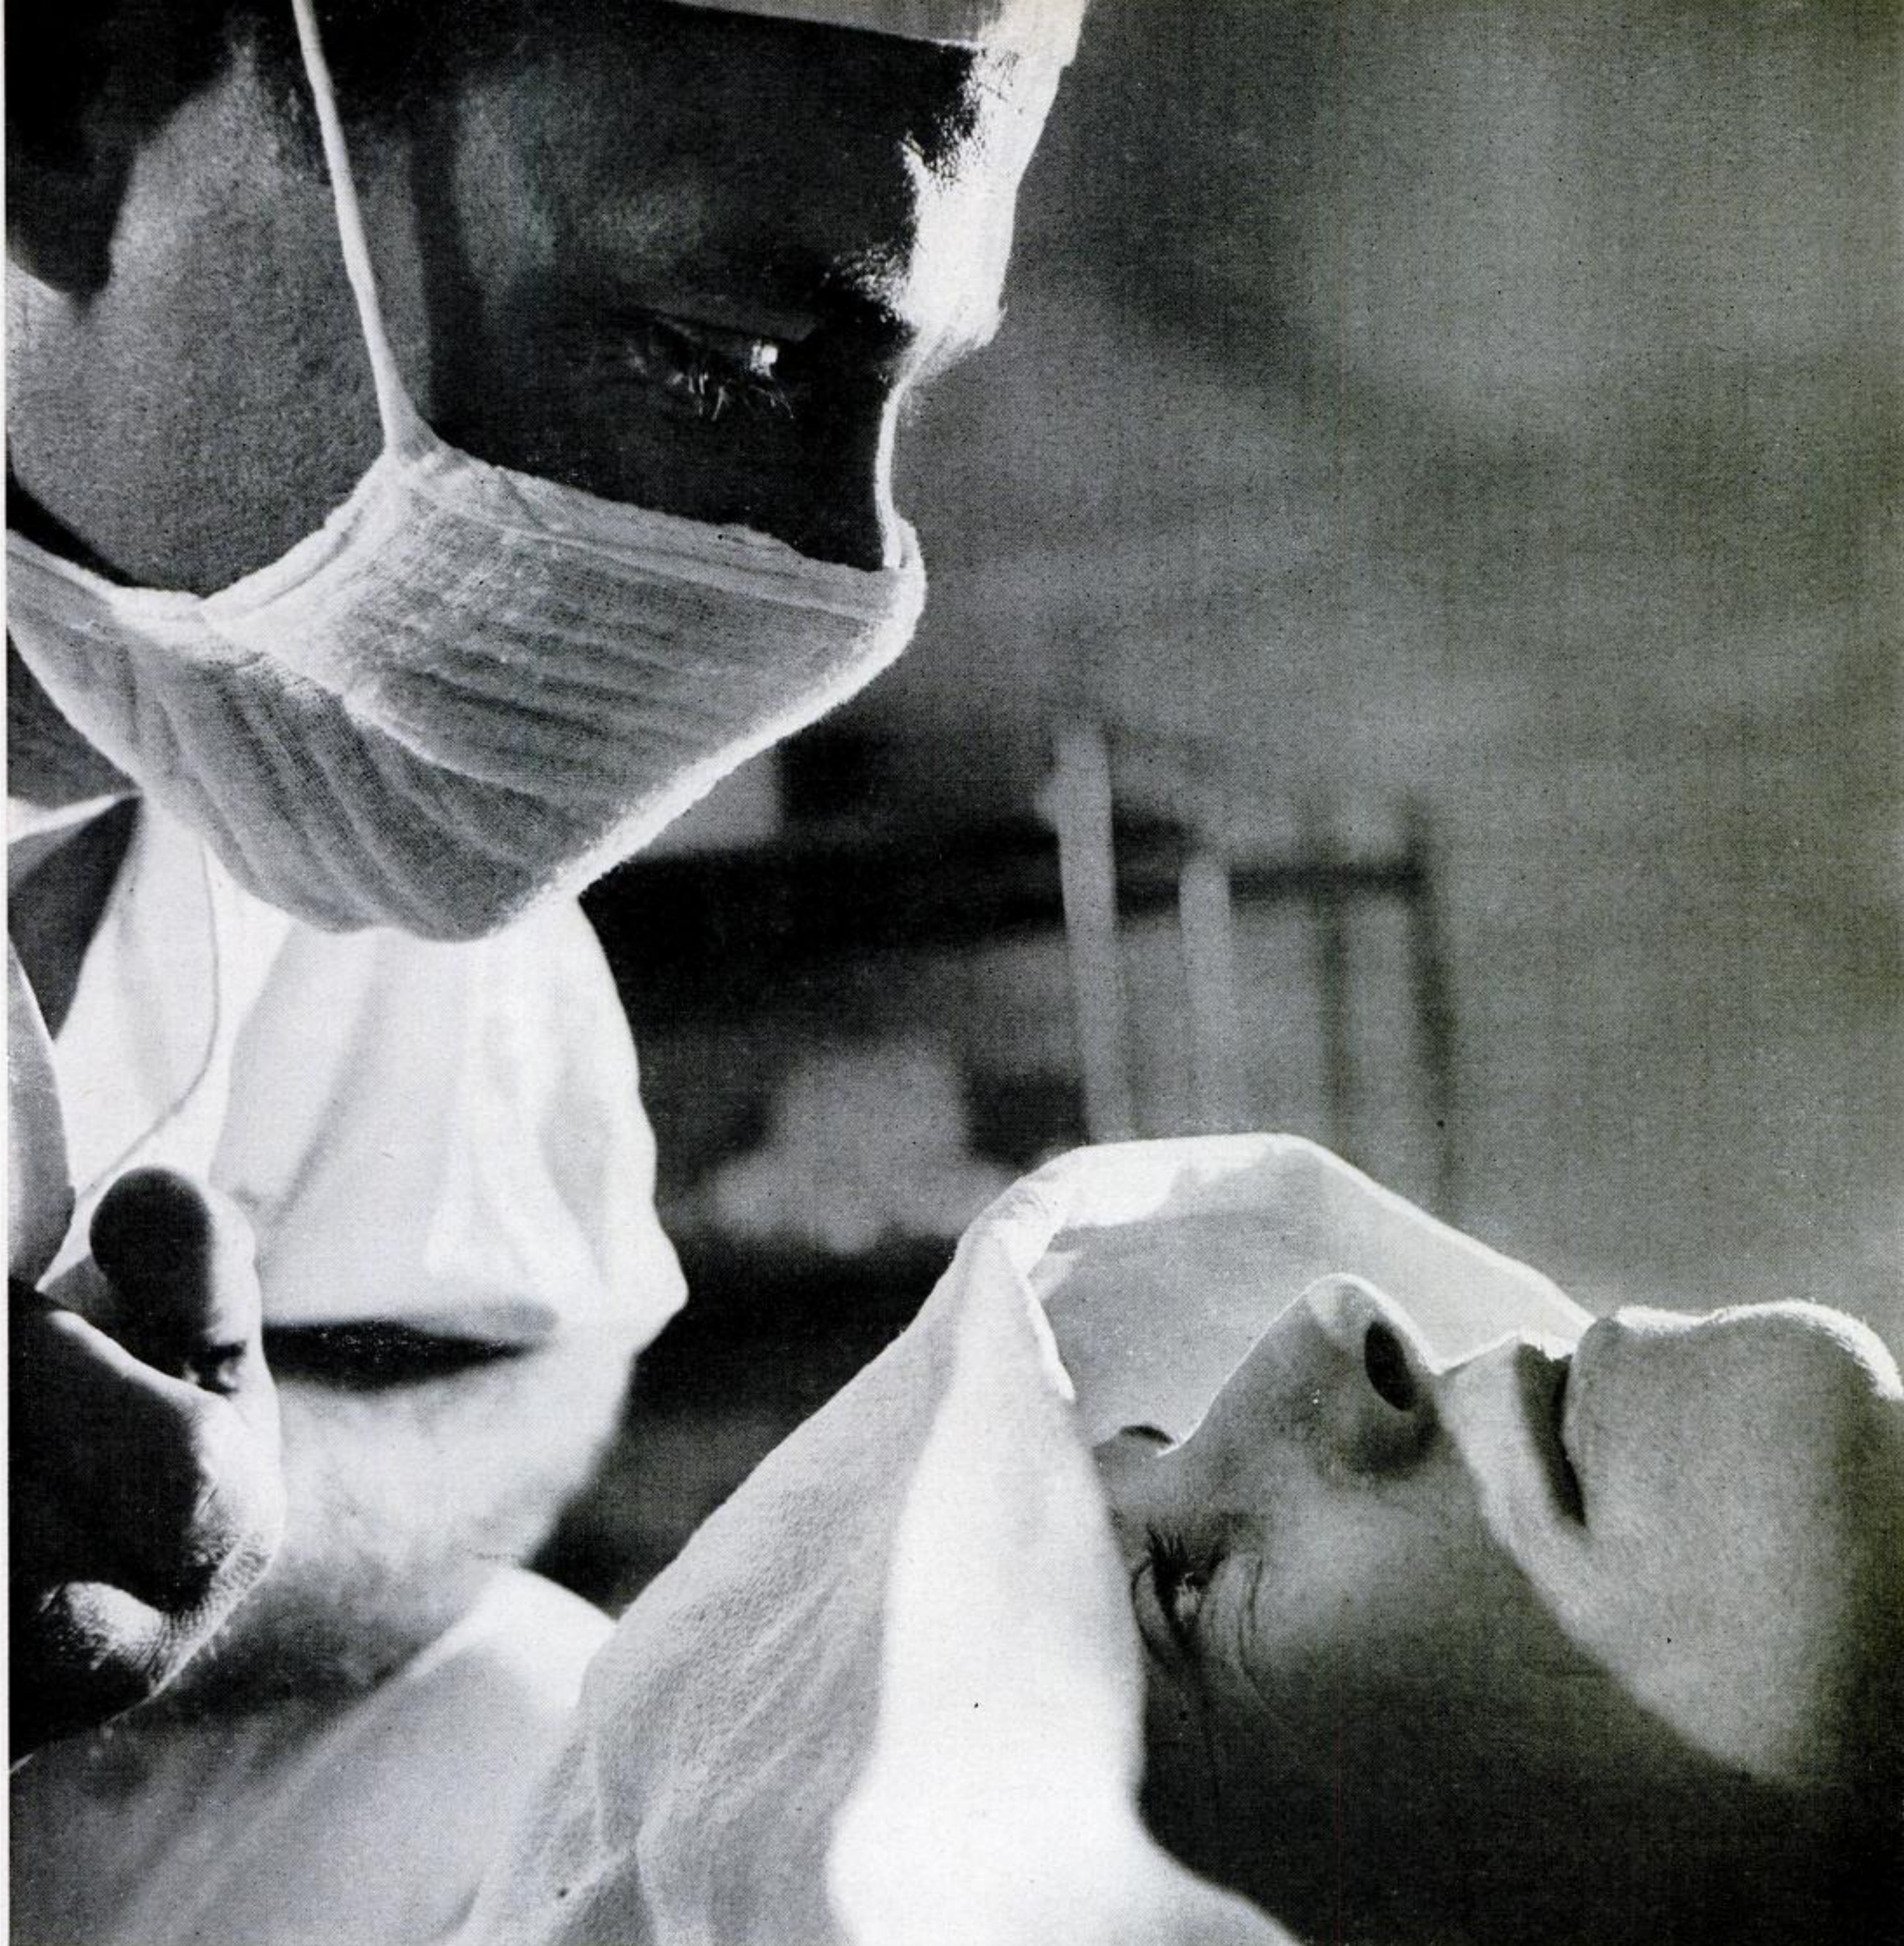

Whatever his specialty, he's a first-class man at it. He's got something that's needed to run a big, busy country.

You don't give him a very swank office, or a very big salary. Industry might pay him twice what he gets from you. So sometimes people ask him (and sometimes he asks himself): "How come you don't quit? Why not use your brains to get ahead in the world?"

But where is ahead? When your nine-to-five routine can come out as a highway, a dam, or a freedom—when the day's grind might mean a year of peace for a hundred and forty million people—what's ahead of that? What's ahead of doing a job for the world's most going concern?

So he doesn't quit. He sticks at his desk, and advances the slow way, and his picture may never get in the paper, and you may never hear his name. But watch for him next time in the trolley, in the pretty good restaurant, in the three-year-old car. Without him this wouldn't be our kind of America—a country that stays healthy and free because public affairs are the business of strictly private men.

ANESTHESIOLOGIST VINCENT COLLINS SOOTHES FRANCES ASHPANT WITH REASSURING WORDS DURING OPERATION. SHE RECEIVED SPINAL ANESTHESIA

THE COMFORTER

Anesthesiologist uses medicine's newest weapons to fight pain

PHOTOGRAPHED FOR LIFE BY CORNELL CAPA

For the man or woman whose body is knotted with pain, there is one compulsive desire—oblivion. Lying in a strange hospital, awaiting events as yet unknown, the patient scans the faces of nurses and doctors, searching hopefully for someone or something to stop the suffering. All too frequently comfort appears at the last moment in the terrifying impartiality of the operating room. As an anesthetic drug is administered and pain subsides, the fears that pain has overshadowed—fears of bleeding, unconsciousness and death—grow bright in the mind. Seemingly abandoned amid strangers, the patient sinks into uneasy sleep.

Happily for their patients and prospective patients, this grim pattern is now disappearing from many U.S. hospitals. The anesthetist, a technician who simply puts people to sleep and wakes them up again, is being replaced by the anesthesiologist, a practitioner of one of the newest fields in medicine. Unlike his predecessor the anesthetist goes into action almost as soon as his patient enters the hospital. He visits him to comfort him, prescribe his anesthetic drug, and tell him what will happen in the operating room. Once there, his familiar face is the first the patient sees. During an operation he continually checks the patient's condition, calling for blood and stimulants as they are needed. And when the patient wakes, the anesthesiologist is still on hand, with quiet words of comfort and reassuring instructions for care. Such a man is Dr. Vincent Joseph Collins (above) of St. Vincent's Hospital in New York City, whose skillful hands and watchful eyes are shown at work on the following pages.

SKILLFUL HANDS

INSERTING AN AIRWAY, Dr. Collins grasps breathing tube in right hand, lighted laryngoscope in his left. Tube carries anesthetic gases and air into lungs, is used when patient must be so completely anesthetized that lungs are paralyzed.

Because of the fantastic variety of tasks he performs, the hands of an anesthesiologist are perhaps the most versatile in any profession. Feeling for a faint pulse, Collins' hands are as sensitive as those of a violinist. Yet he possesses the crude strength of a wrestler when forcing sedatives on a struggling, delirious strong man. As an operation proceeds, he must minister to the continually changing condition of his patient. At various stages in the operation he may need blood, stimulants, perhaps a different anesthetic. Collins may use as many as 30 pieces of specialized equipment. Responsible for the general health of his patient, he must know what to do as each development, expected or unforeseen, occurs, and only the anesthesiologist has this knowledge and the skillful hands to use it. To give artificial respiration to a choking newborn infant, he must handle the baby as gently as a glass blower handles a goblet. To relieve the agony of a patient with an uncontrollable facial tic, Collins must plunge a long needle at precisely the right angle to reach a position near a deeply buried nerve trunk—an error of 1/8th of an inch could cause

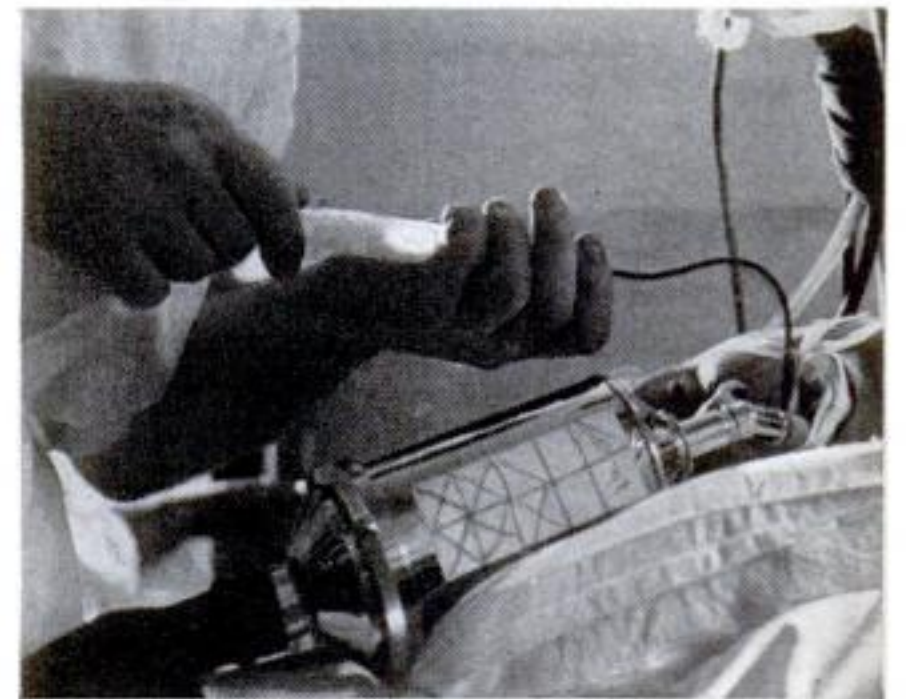

GIVING A SPINAL, COLLINS WITHDRAWS STIFF STYLET FROM HOLLOW NEEDLE HELD IN HIS LEFT HAND. ANESTHETIC DRUG WILL BE PUMPED INTO NEEDLE

COUNTING PULSE, Dr. Collins feels patient's temple while holding mask over face. Patient is unconscious from cyclopropane but breathes normally.

EXAMINING PUPIL, Collins pulls back the eyelid to gauge level of anesthesia patient is in. Dilated pupil indicates he is in second, intermediate stage.

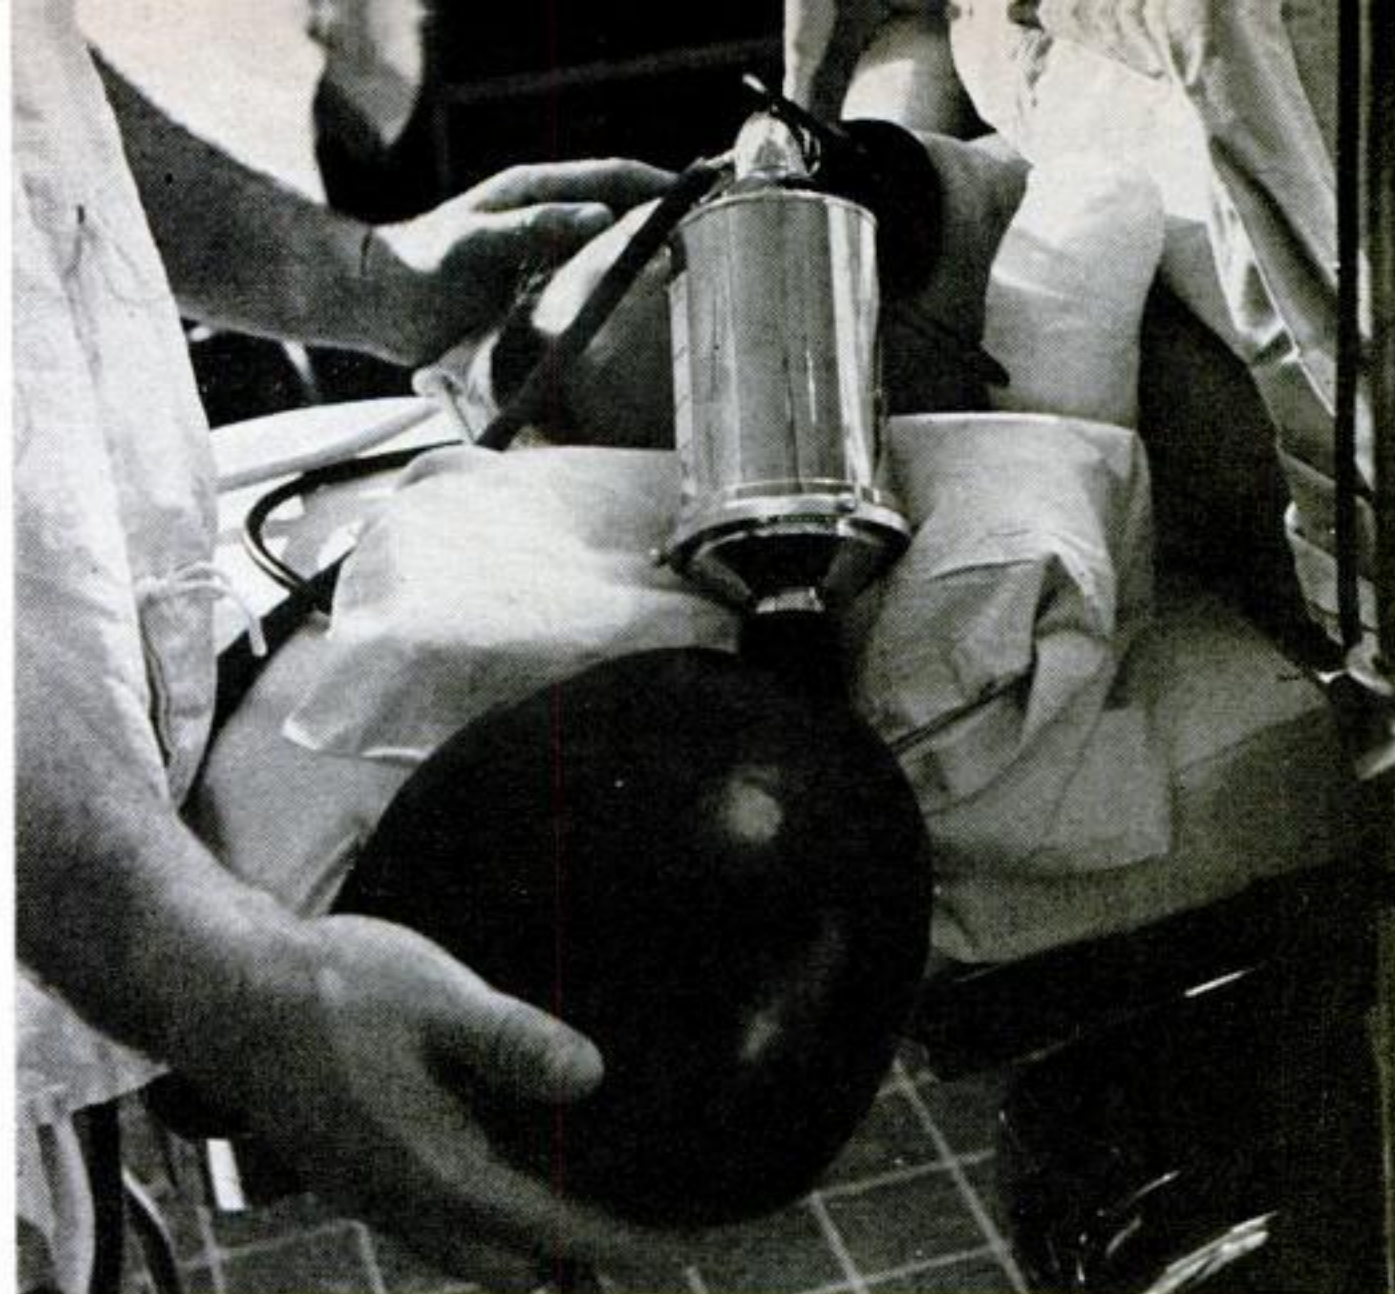

INFLATING A BALLOON, fastened like a doughnut around far end of breathing tube to lock it in place in trachea, Collins manipulates syringe pump.

ARE IN CONTROL

severe damage. He must also be quick, for if a patient's heart begins to skip, stimulants must be injected immediately. Lastly Collins is an expert juggler and at any moment may be doing half a dozen things almost simultaneously: stroking the patient's head, examining the pupil of his eye, rhythmically squeezing and releasing the bag which does the breathing for him, and adjusting the flow of blood and other solutions into his veins, all the while making notes on his condition.

Collins' exacting profession is a direct outgrowth of the advances of modern surgery and medicine. In recent years surgeons have developed operations which would have been impossibly radical a decade ago. At the same time chemists have discovered a host of anesthetic drugs and stimulants. Such operations would be impossible without the anesthesiologist, for he alone is familiar with the techniques and drugs necessary to keep the patient alive. Though his knowledge is most valuable during a difficult operation, his skill adds an increment of safety to routine cases as well, for even there the possibility of complication is always present.

SQUEEZING AN AIRBAG to simulate the rhythmic motion of lungs, Collins' hands do the breathing for lungs paralyzed by powerful anesthetic drug. Carbon dioxide expelled by patient is absorbed by the canister of soda lime above the bag.

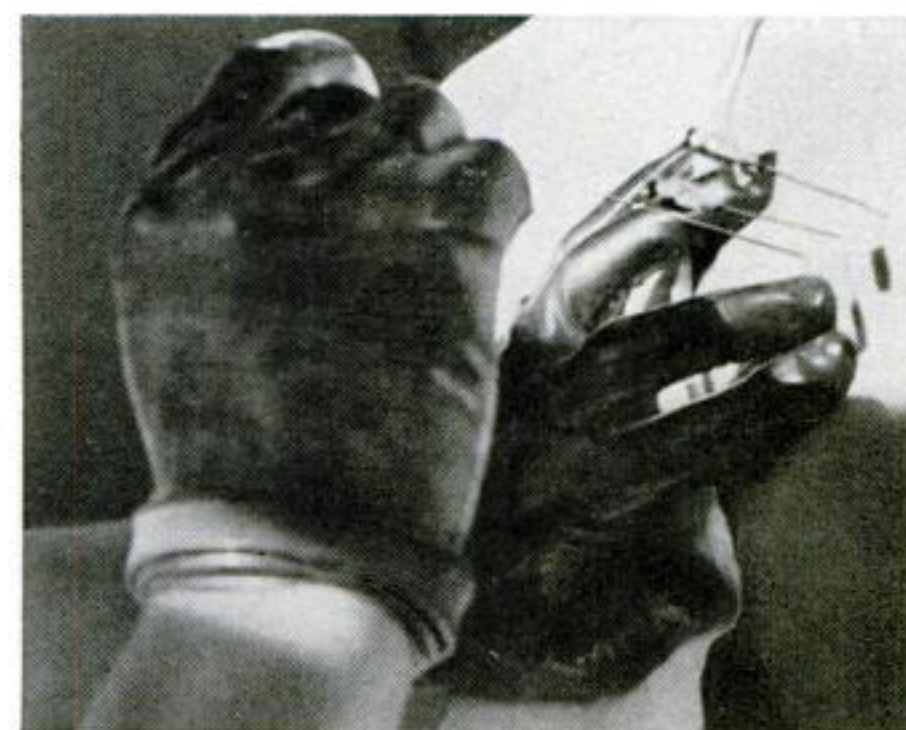

CALMING A PATIENT AND TAKING HER PULSE AT SAME TIME, COLLINS' GENTLE FINGERS REST ON WRIST OF THE ARM WHICH IS GETTING A BLOOD TRANSFUSION

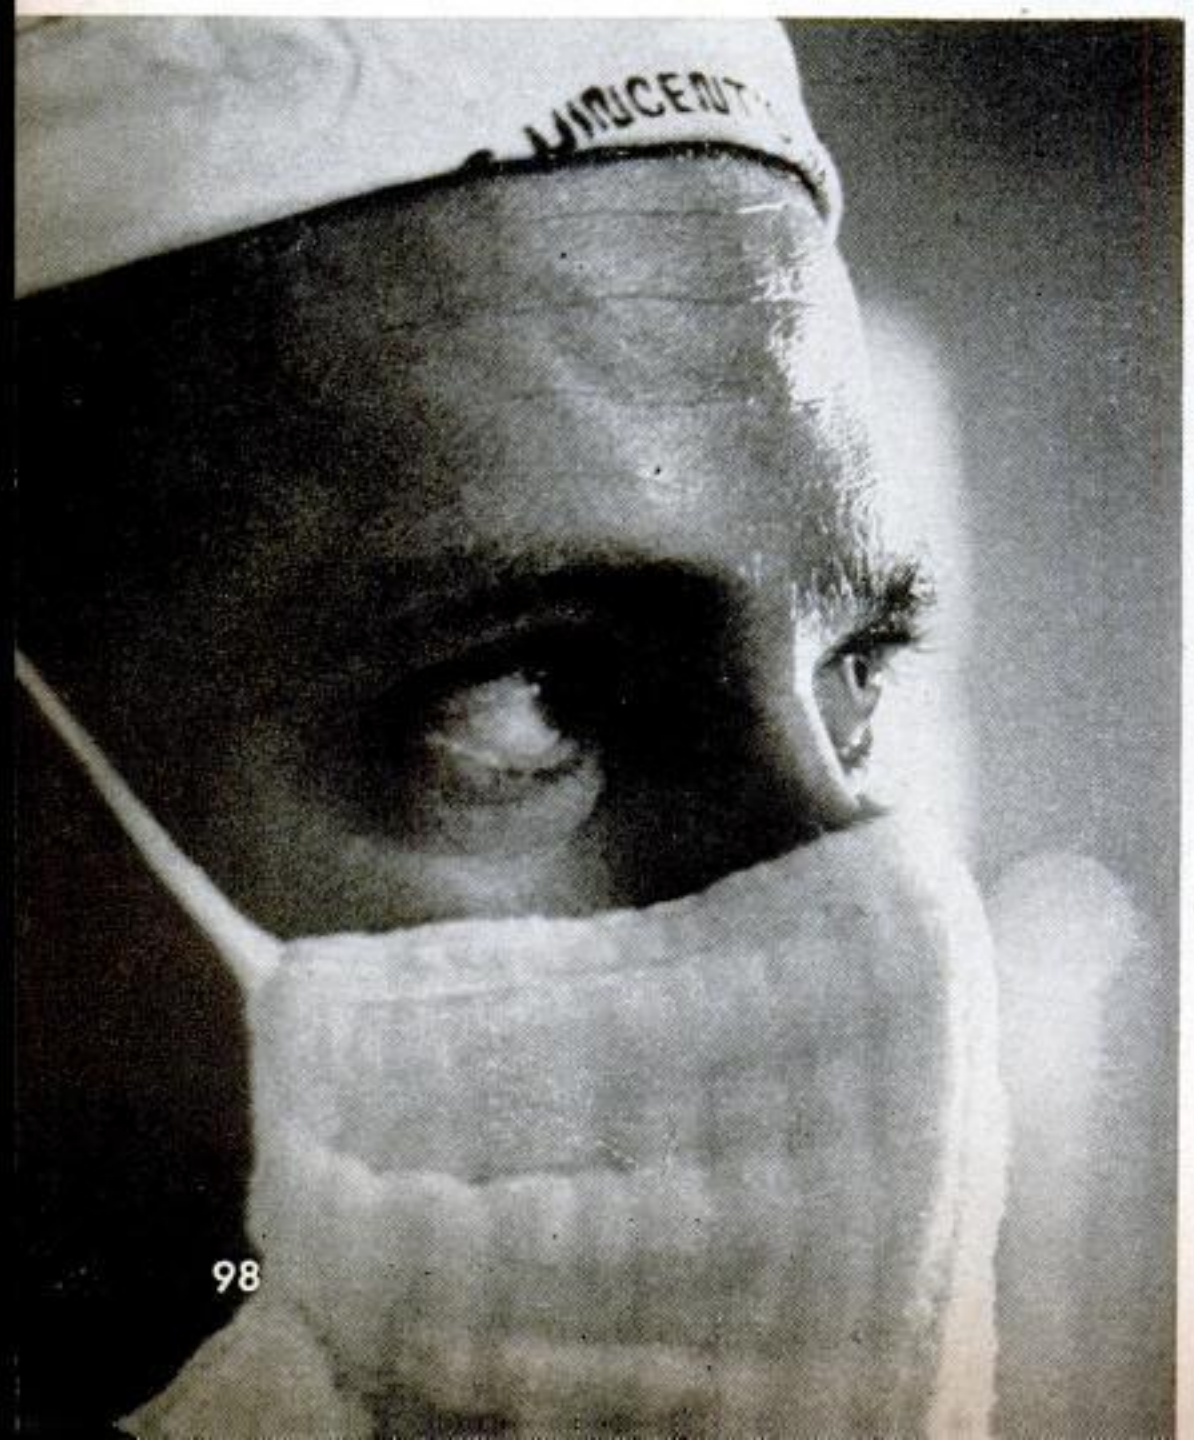

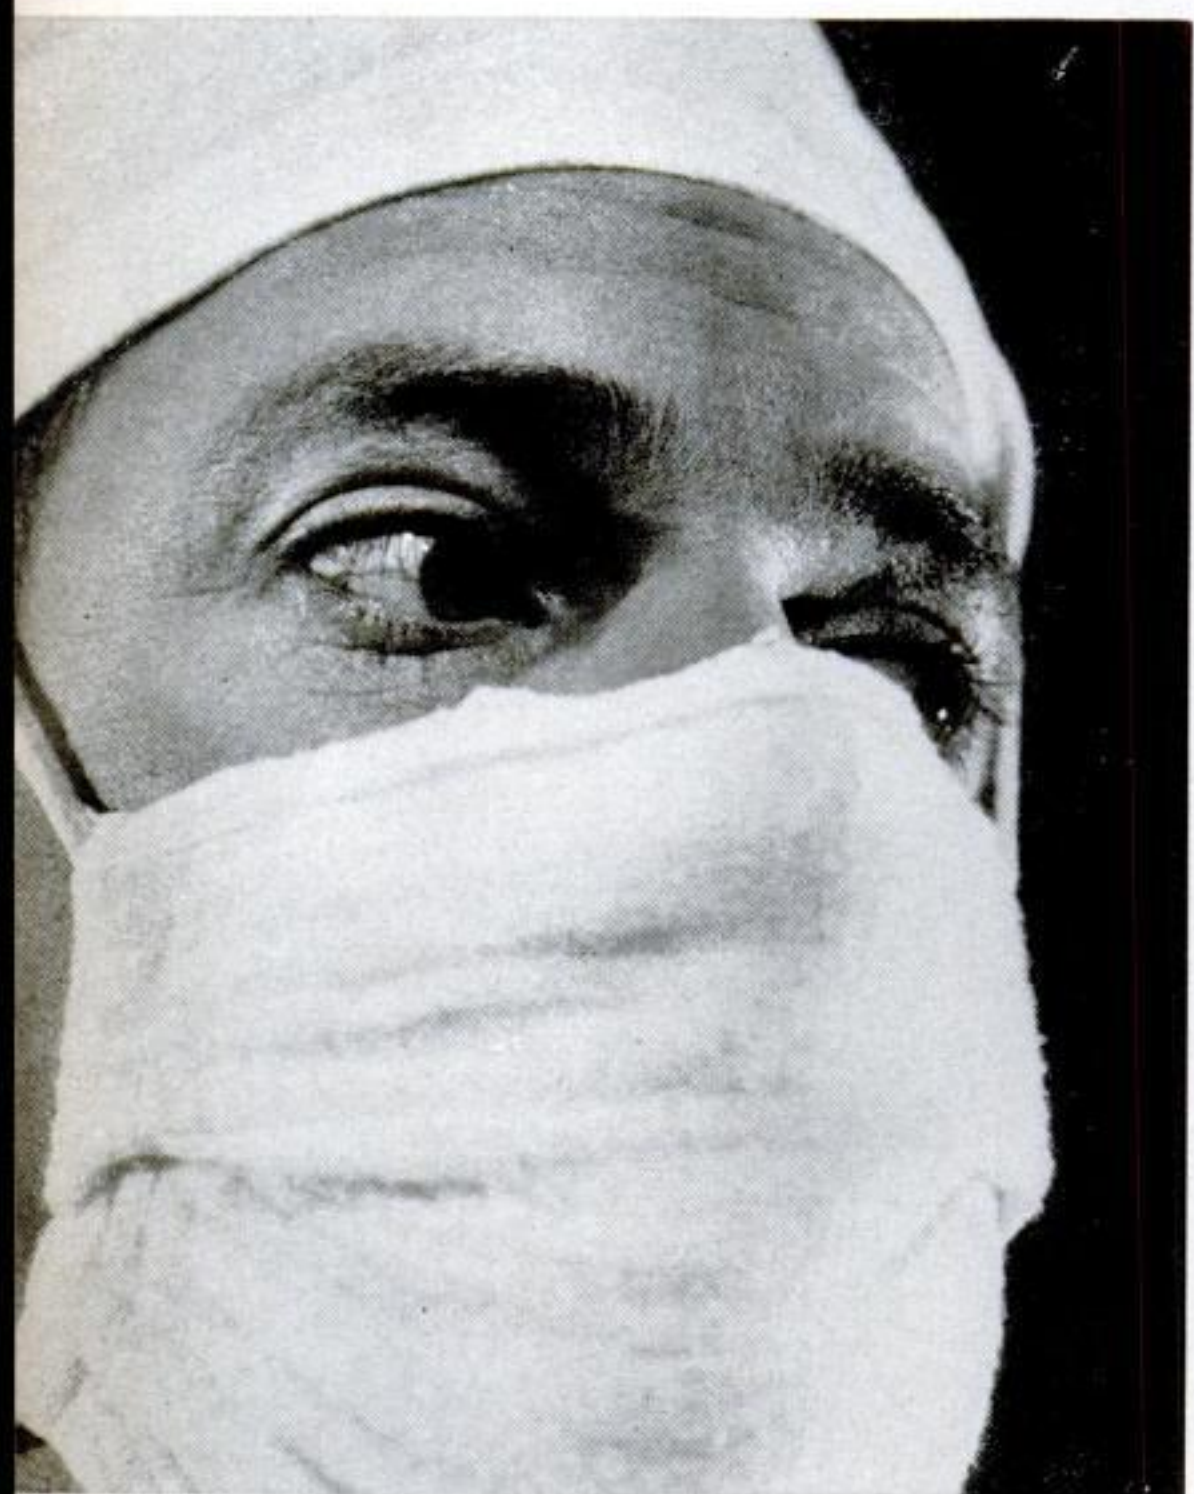

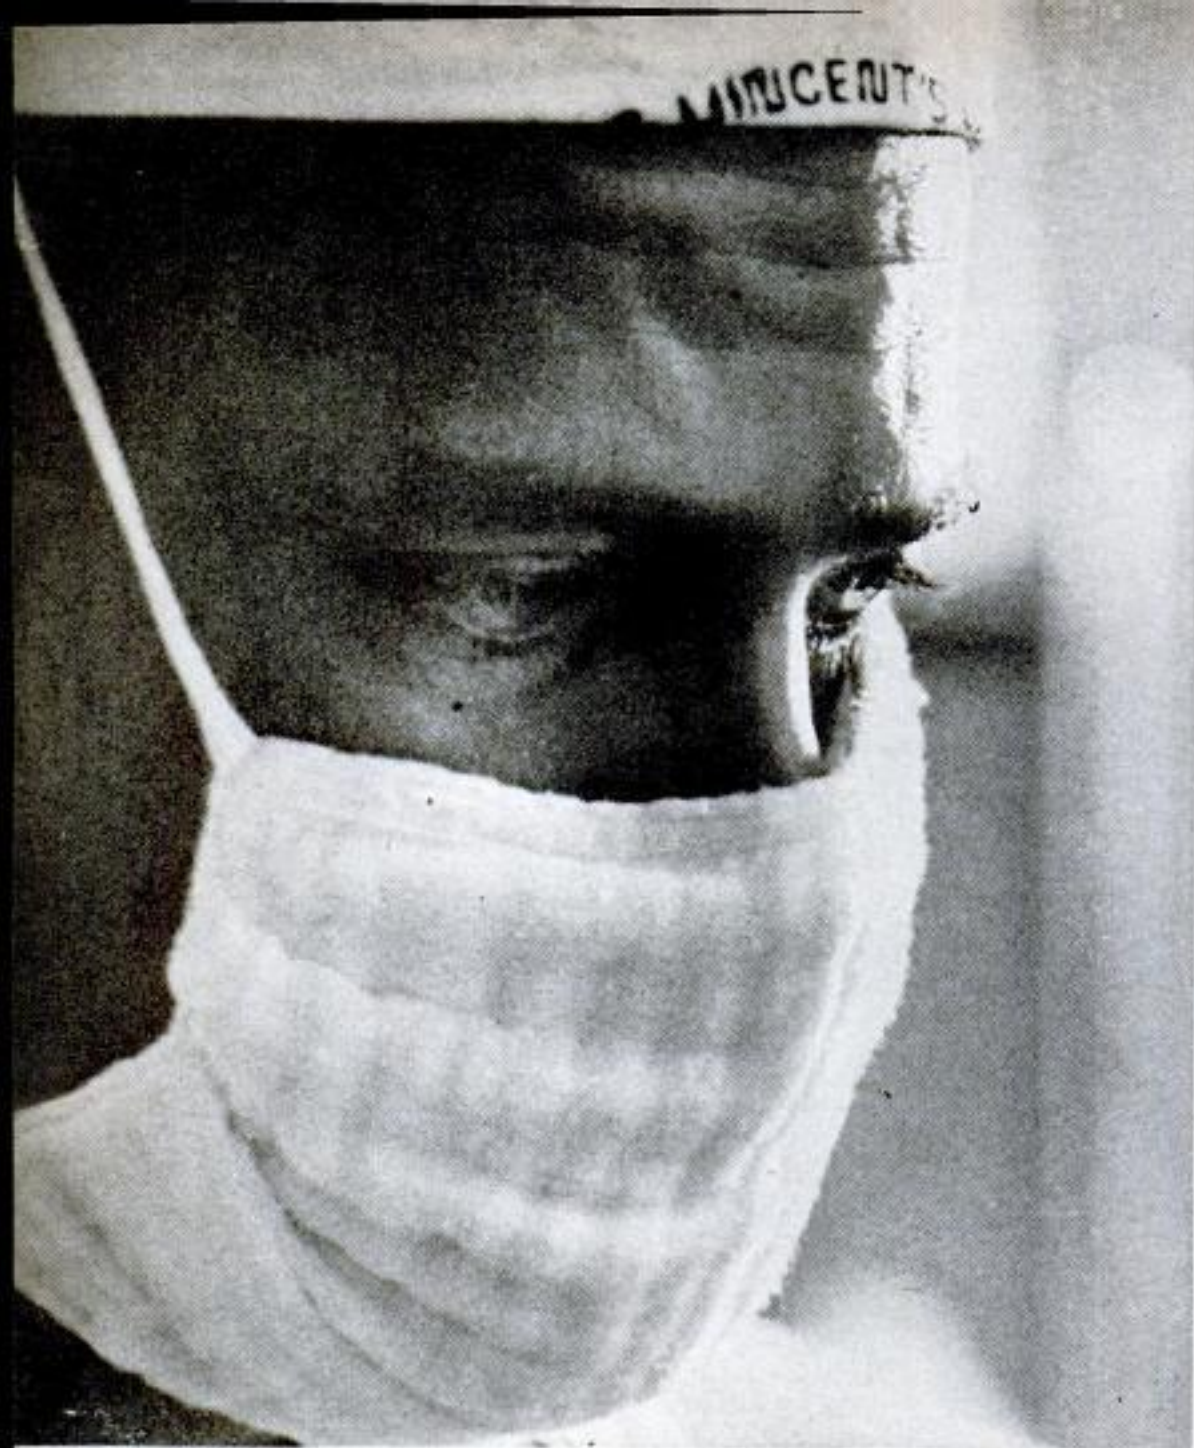

RELIEVING NAUSEA, he gives nervous patient a whiff of spirits of ammonia to prevent fainting. Though in no pain, she was seriously upset by fear.

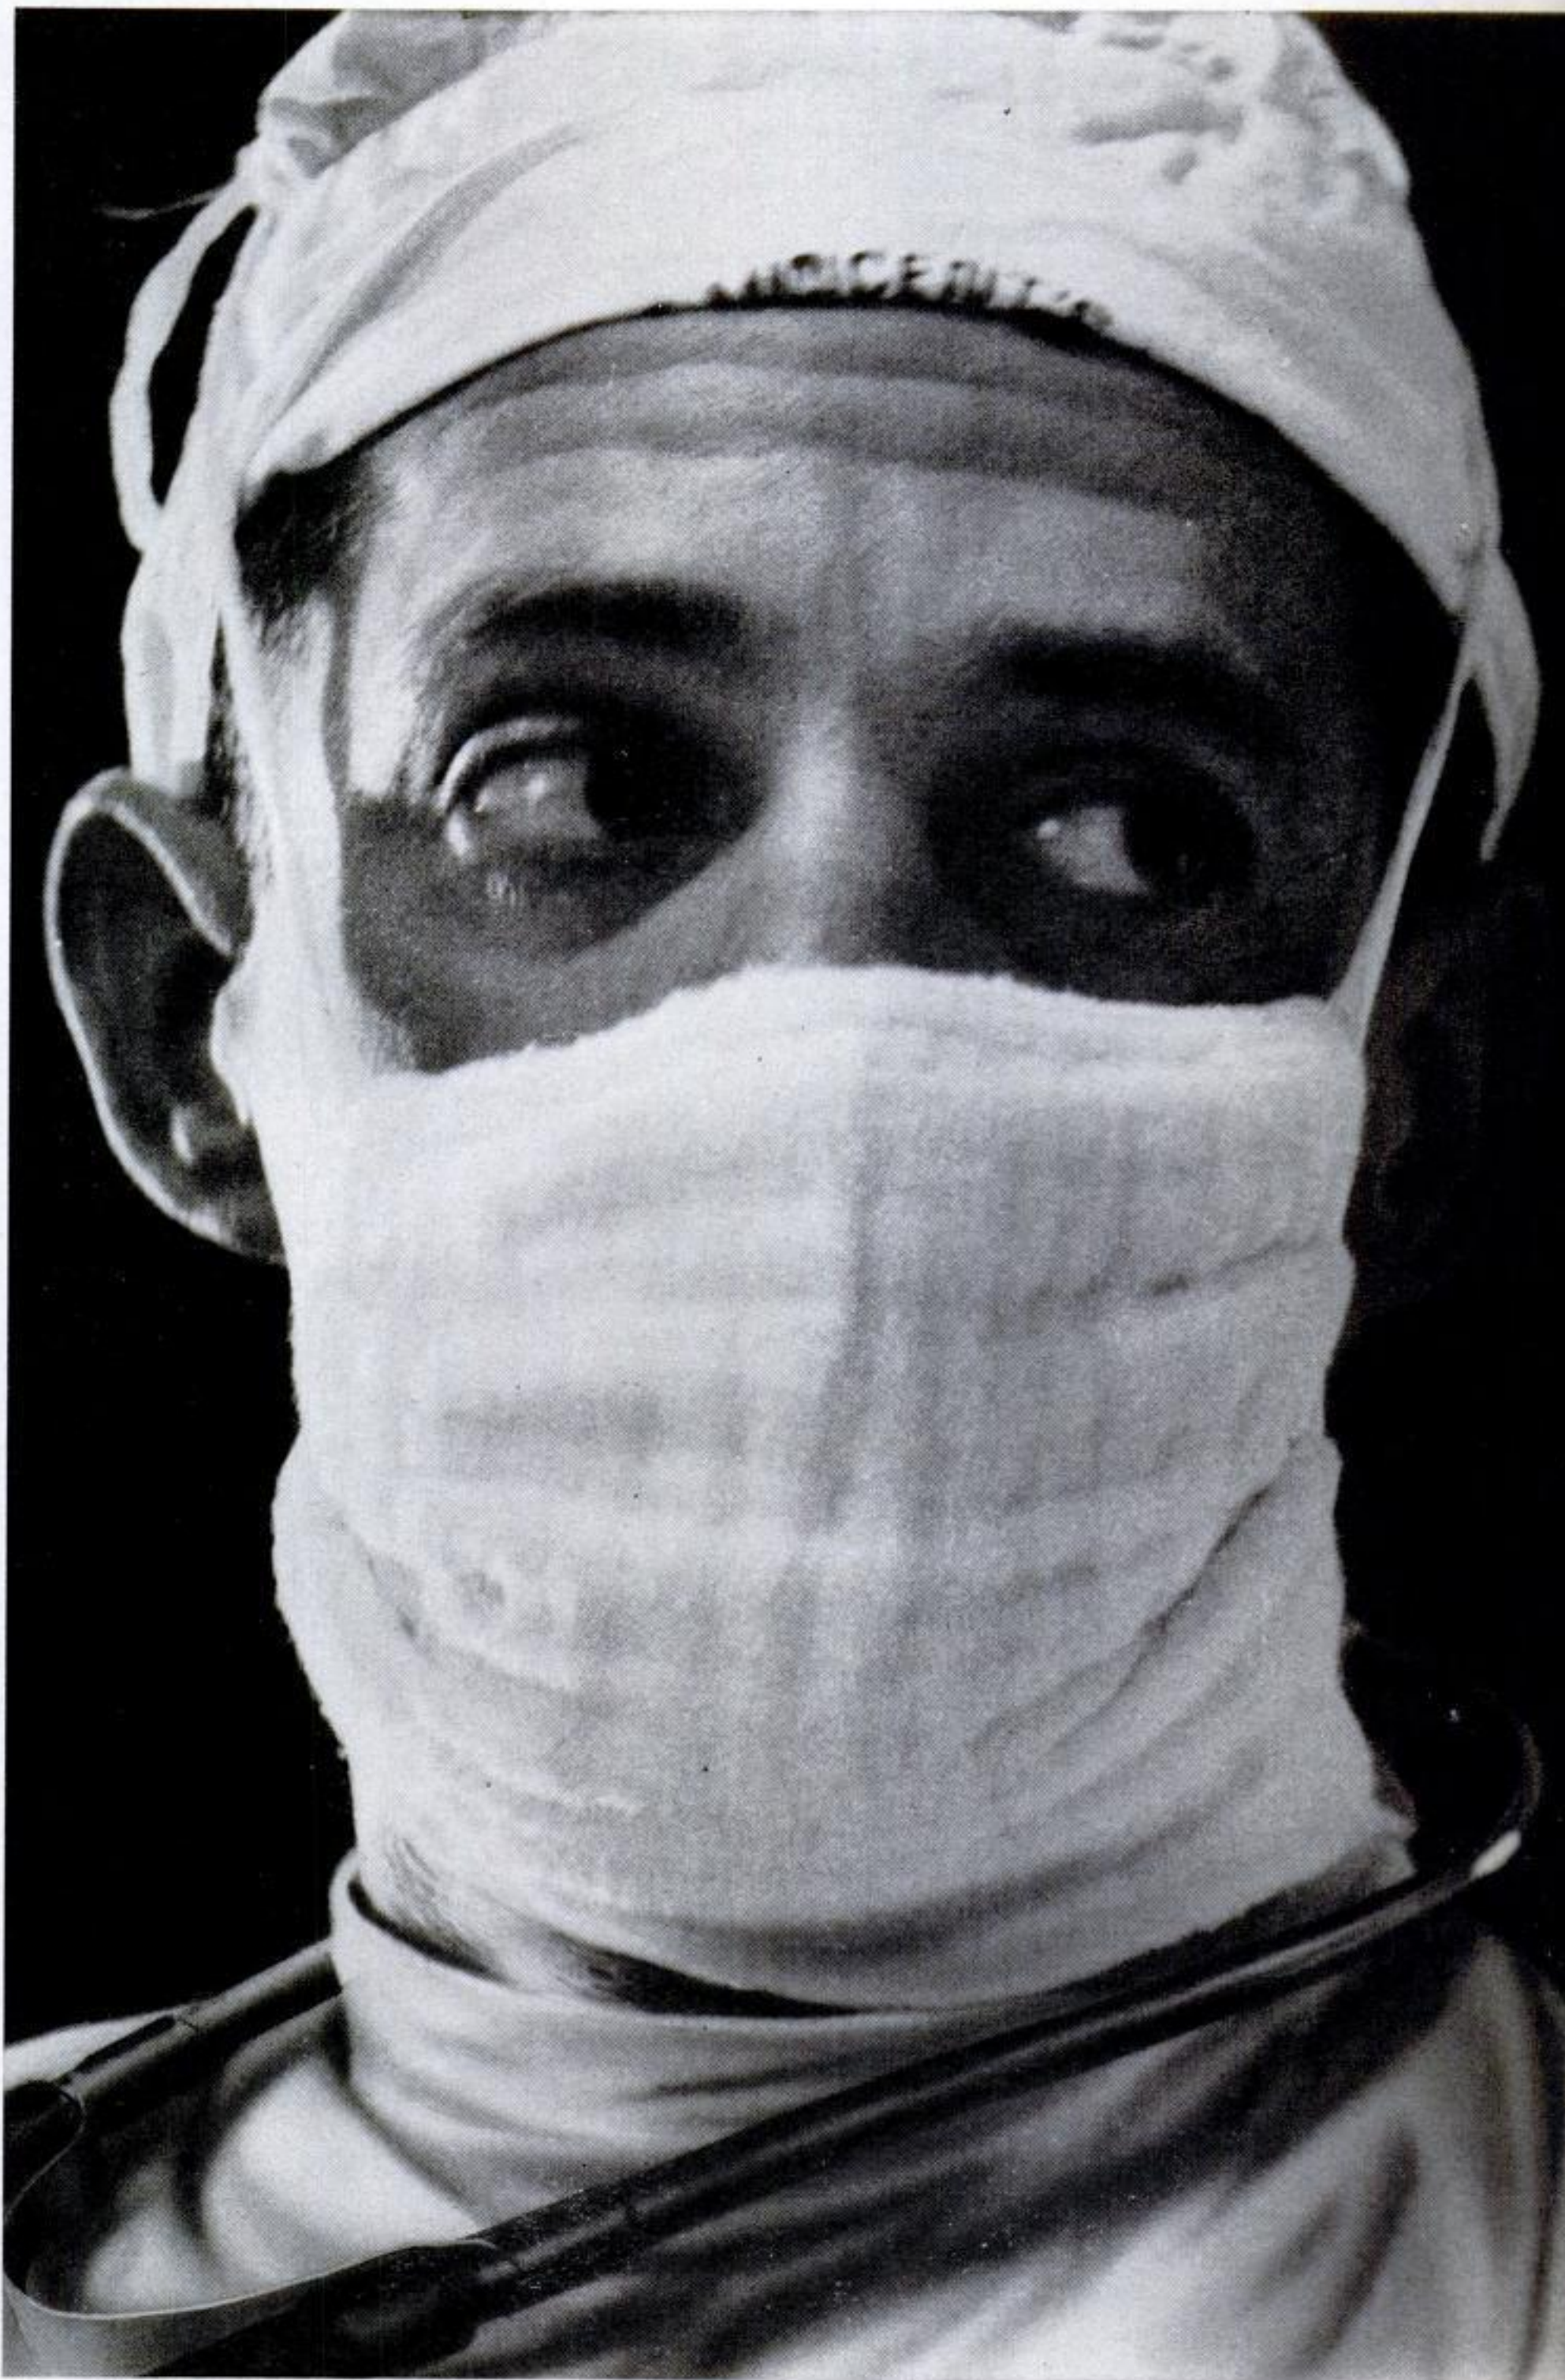

PATting CHEEKS of a patient who is conscious during an operation, Collins reassures her that all is well. Towel shields her eyes from brilliant lights.

BLOCKING NERVES, Collins deftly inserts long hollow needles into the nerve trunk so anesthetic fluid can be squirted in to relieve a muscle spasm.

ALERT EYES SPOT

Two pairs of eyes dominate the masked world of the operating room—those of the anesthesiologist and those of the surgeon. As the operation proceeds their glances frequently meet (above), and hurried whispers are exchanged as Collins and the surgeon discuss the patient's condition. But while the surgeon concentrates on the intricate work at his fingertips, the eyes of the anesthesiologist rove restlessly about the whole room, darting from one dial to another as he checks the clutter of equipment which is helping to keep the patient alive. Occasionally Dr. Collins appears withdrawn, as he listens to the patient's heartbeat. Suddenly his eyes grow intense again as he inspects the tanks of oxygen and anesthetic gas, or glances down at his patient's forearm to make sure the transfusion is dripping properly.

DANGER

If the patient is conscious, as in spinal anesthesia, Collins' smiling eyes as well as his soft words bring a message of confidence. With a patient under deepest anesthesia his expression grows apprehensive, for the heart may stop and need stimulation. Throughout the operation the task of sustaining life never ceases, the unexpected is always present and the eyes of Vincent Collins are never still.

ANXIOUSLY Dr. Collins and the surgeon (right) discuss interrupting operation briefly so the patient can rest. His heart had suddenly weakened.

INTENSELY, Collins listens to patient's heart-beat (above), then looks at blood pressure machine.

CHARRED AGONY of burned man made it impossible for Collins, here touching eye to test reflexes, to give inhalant anesthesia. But he quickly found a method (below) to relieve the pain.

INDIRECT BALM, a procaine solution dripped into the vein of the left foot, halted burned man's pain. The patient's right leg was broken by the explosion that burned him and is in a traction splint.

COLLINS' REWARD comes ten days later as doctor finds burned man, saved from pain, shock by procaine and nutrient fluids, has recovered so well a face mask can be used during skin grafts.

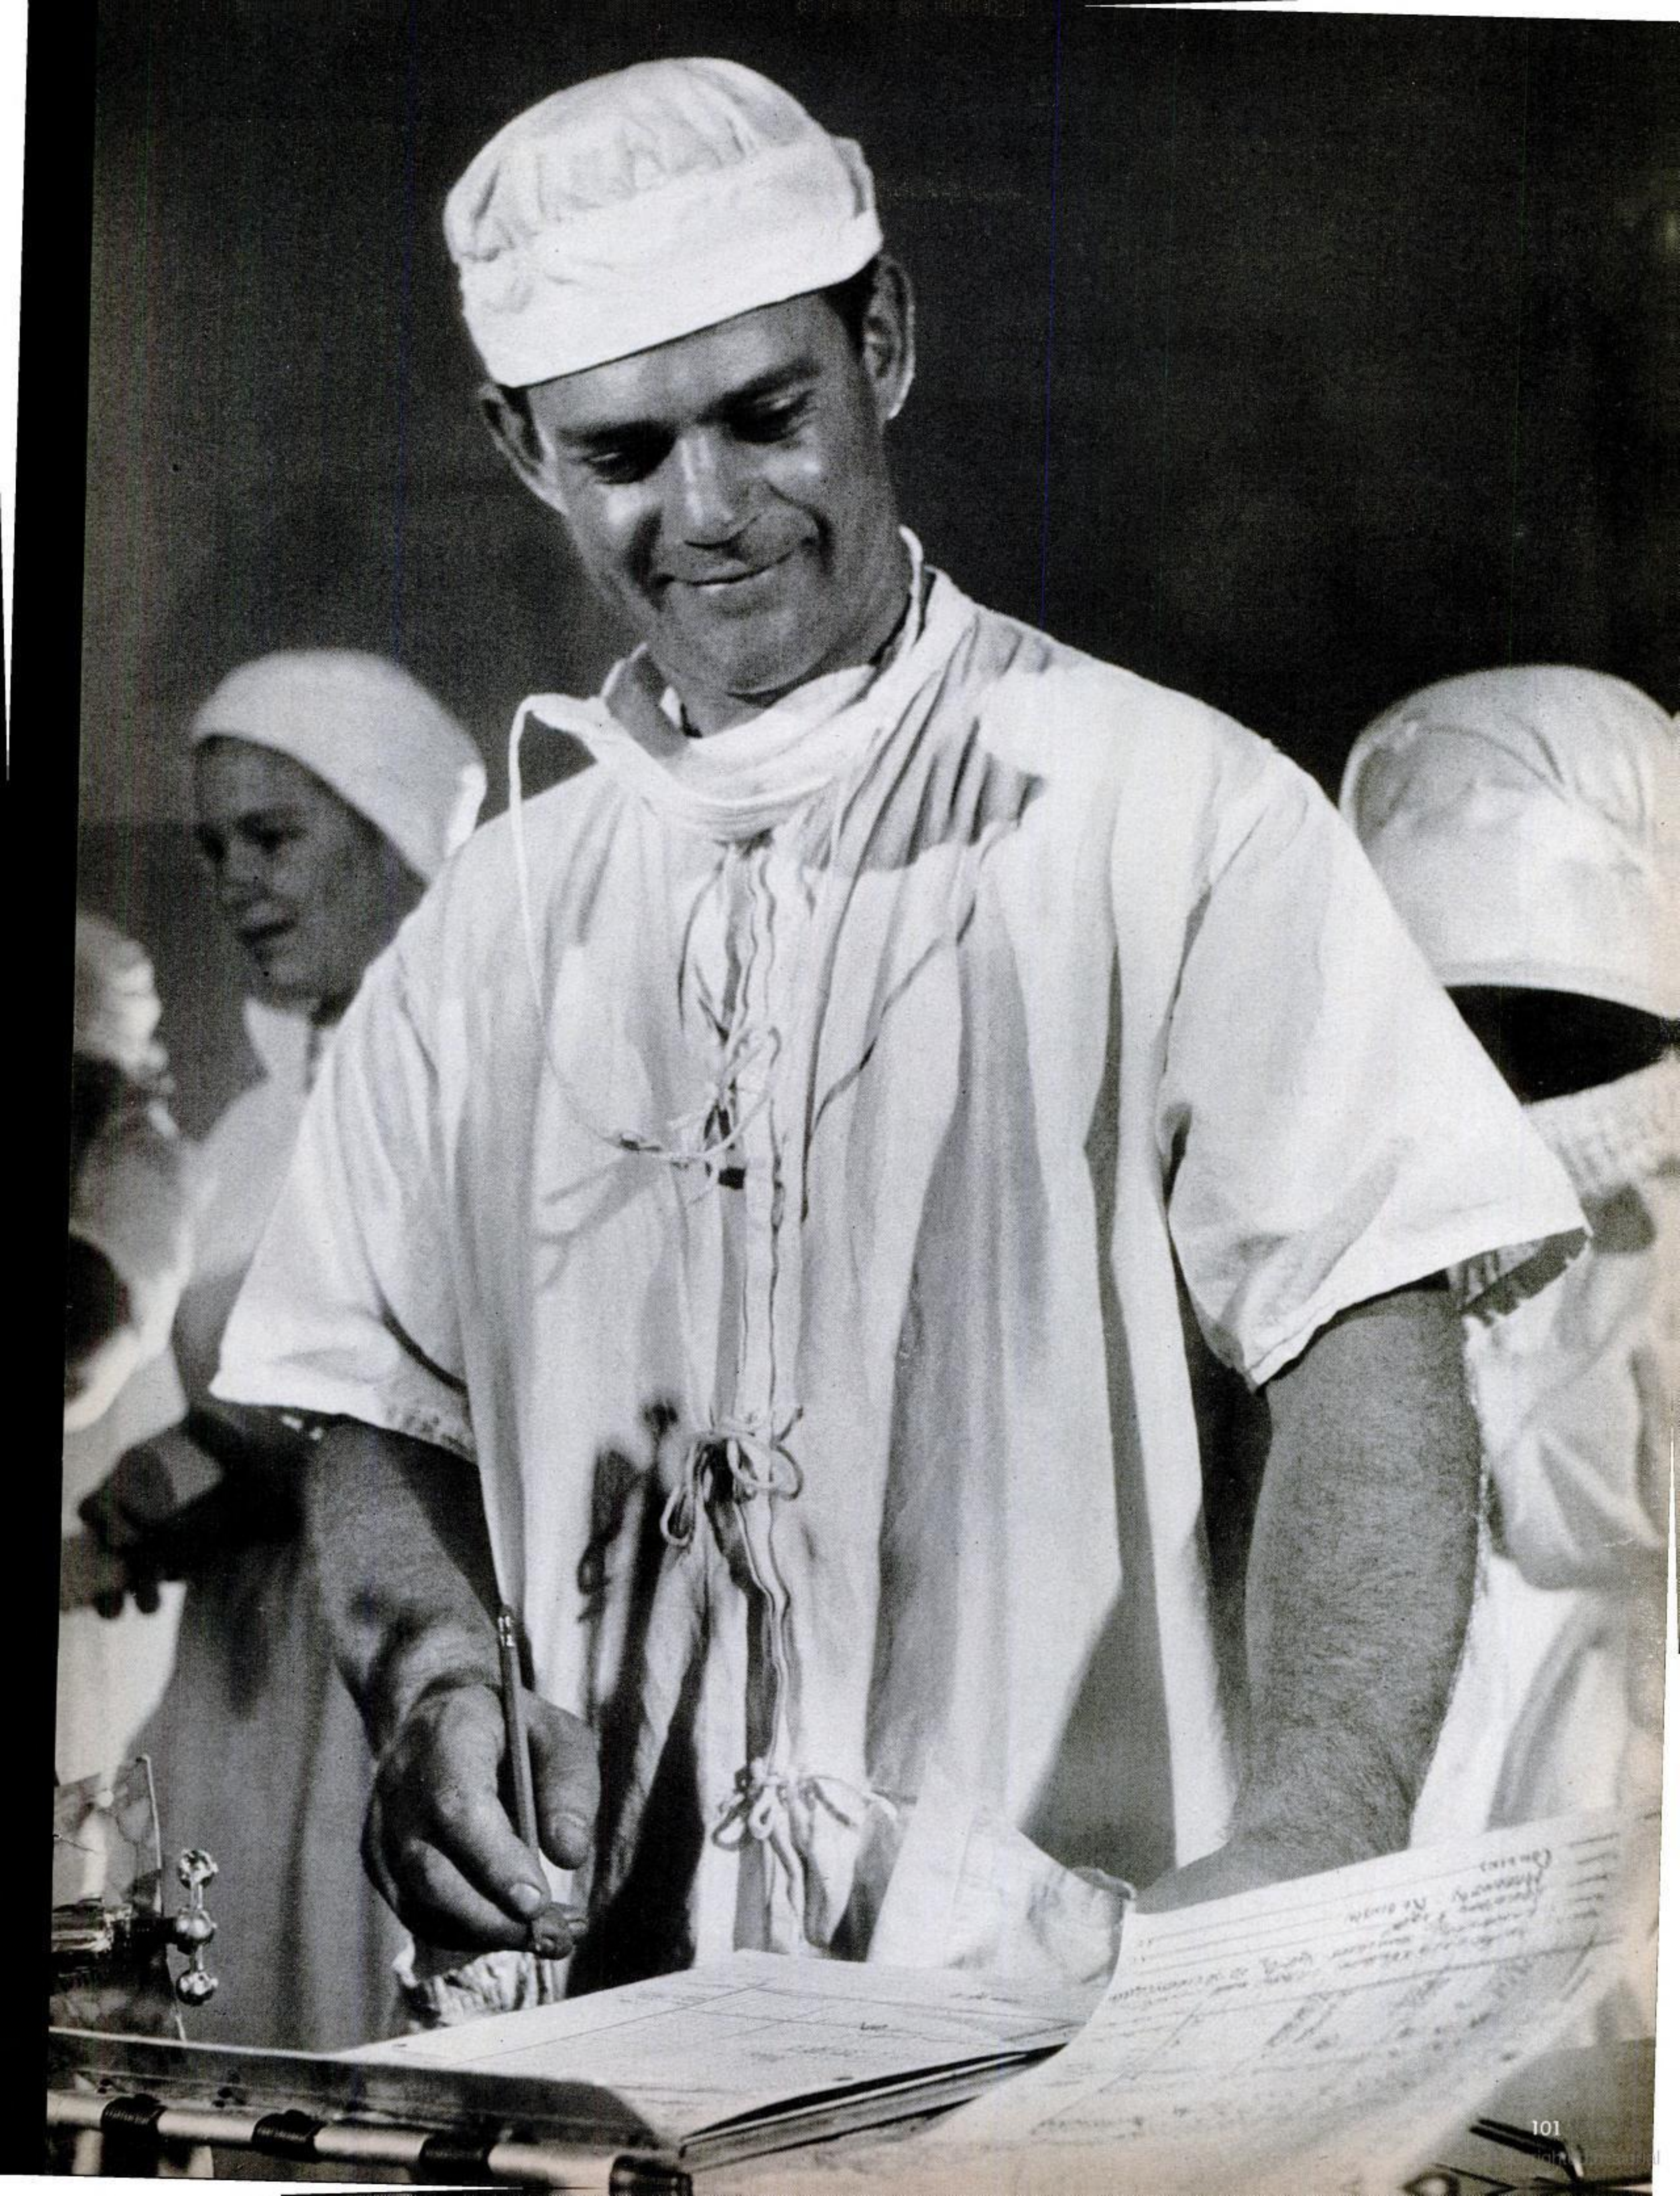

PAIN-FREE BIRTH, Caesarean performed after Collins (lower left) applied spinal block, reaches climax as surgeon lifts baby from incision for its first breath.

A TIRED GRIN ENDS HIS DAY

As chief of anesthesiology at St. Vincent's Hospital, Dr. Vincent Collins fills a frantic 18-hour-a-day schedule. He rarely takes more than a few minutes for lunch and sees little of his wife and five children. Two afternoons a week are devoted to teaching, and currently he has three student anesthesiologists under him whom he drives relentlessly in his eagerness to perfect them. The rest of the time he is hustling about the hospital, visiting and comforting patients, managing the blood bank, working in the operating room or deadening the pain of the variety of emergency cases which flow ceaselessly into the hospital.

Some emergency cases are victims of suffocation—by smoke, water or obstructions. Though the police department has resuscitation equipment, as in most cities, few officers know how to use it. Other cases are emergency births, like the Caesarean delivery of Veronica Dickens' son (above). Here Collins demonstrated the comforting personal contact which will make his name long remembered by Mrs. Dickens as that of a friend. Before the operation he chatted with her. "We'll raise the flag if it's a girl, Mrs. Dickens." During the operation Collins talked continuously in a soothing, confident voice: "Turn on your left side . . . At's a girl. . . Now you're going to feel a little pinprick, like a mosquito . . . You're just a wonderful girl . . . You're just a grand patient . . . Feel sleepy? That's good . . . This couldn't be easier . . ." As the surgeon delivered the baby, Collins announced it was a boy and added, "Just like your husband, eh?" "Yes, doctor. He's got a pug nose." Collins gave her an injection and she drifted off to sleep. Then Anesthesiologist Collins took off his face mask and allowed himself a tired grin of satisfaction (opposite).

THE WINNER, Vincent Collins shoves off his mask after the successful Caesarean delivery and finishes the detailed record he keeps of each operation. ➔

A KING IS DEPOSED: SIX FATEFUL HOURS

Egypt's new boss tells inside story of coup that overthrew Farouk

by MAJOR GENERAL MOHAMED NAGUIB

as told to DAVID DOUGLAS DUNCAN

On July 26 Major General Mohamed Naguib, commander in chief of Egypt's armed forces, startled the world by announcing that Farouk no longer was king. Now General Naguib has revealed to LIFE the hitherto untold story of how a little band of army officers overthrew a powerful tyranny. LIFE presents the account as a historical document. It is, of course, the military junta's version of the story, reflecting in places its members' patriotic zeal—as, for example, in the general's reference to Israel as “an enemy threatening our eastern frontiers.”

In the short time since the coup, Naguib's new government already has started to deliver on some of its promises. Programs for land reform, for reducing the tax load on the poor and for cleaning up the corrupt old regime have got under way, and general elections have been promised for next February. But last week there were signs that the new leaders were having their troubles—a strike at some cotton mills near Alexandria erupted into violent riots, and General Naguib announced that the censorship he had so proudly banned after the coup would now have to be partially reimposed.

In our Koran it is written:

*“Then the word went forth: O Earth! swallow up Thy water, and O Sky! withhold thy rain.
... away with those who do wrong.”*

THE seeds of our fight for freedom were sown many, many years ago. Now, only now, after so much waiting have they burst into blossom.

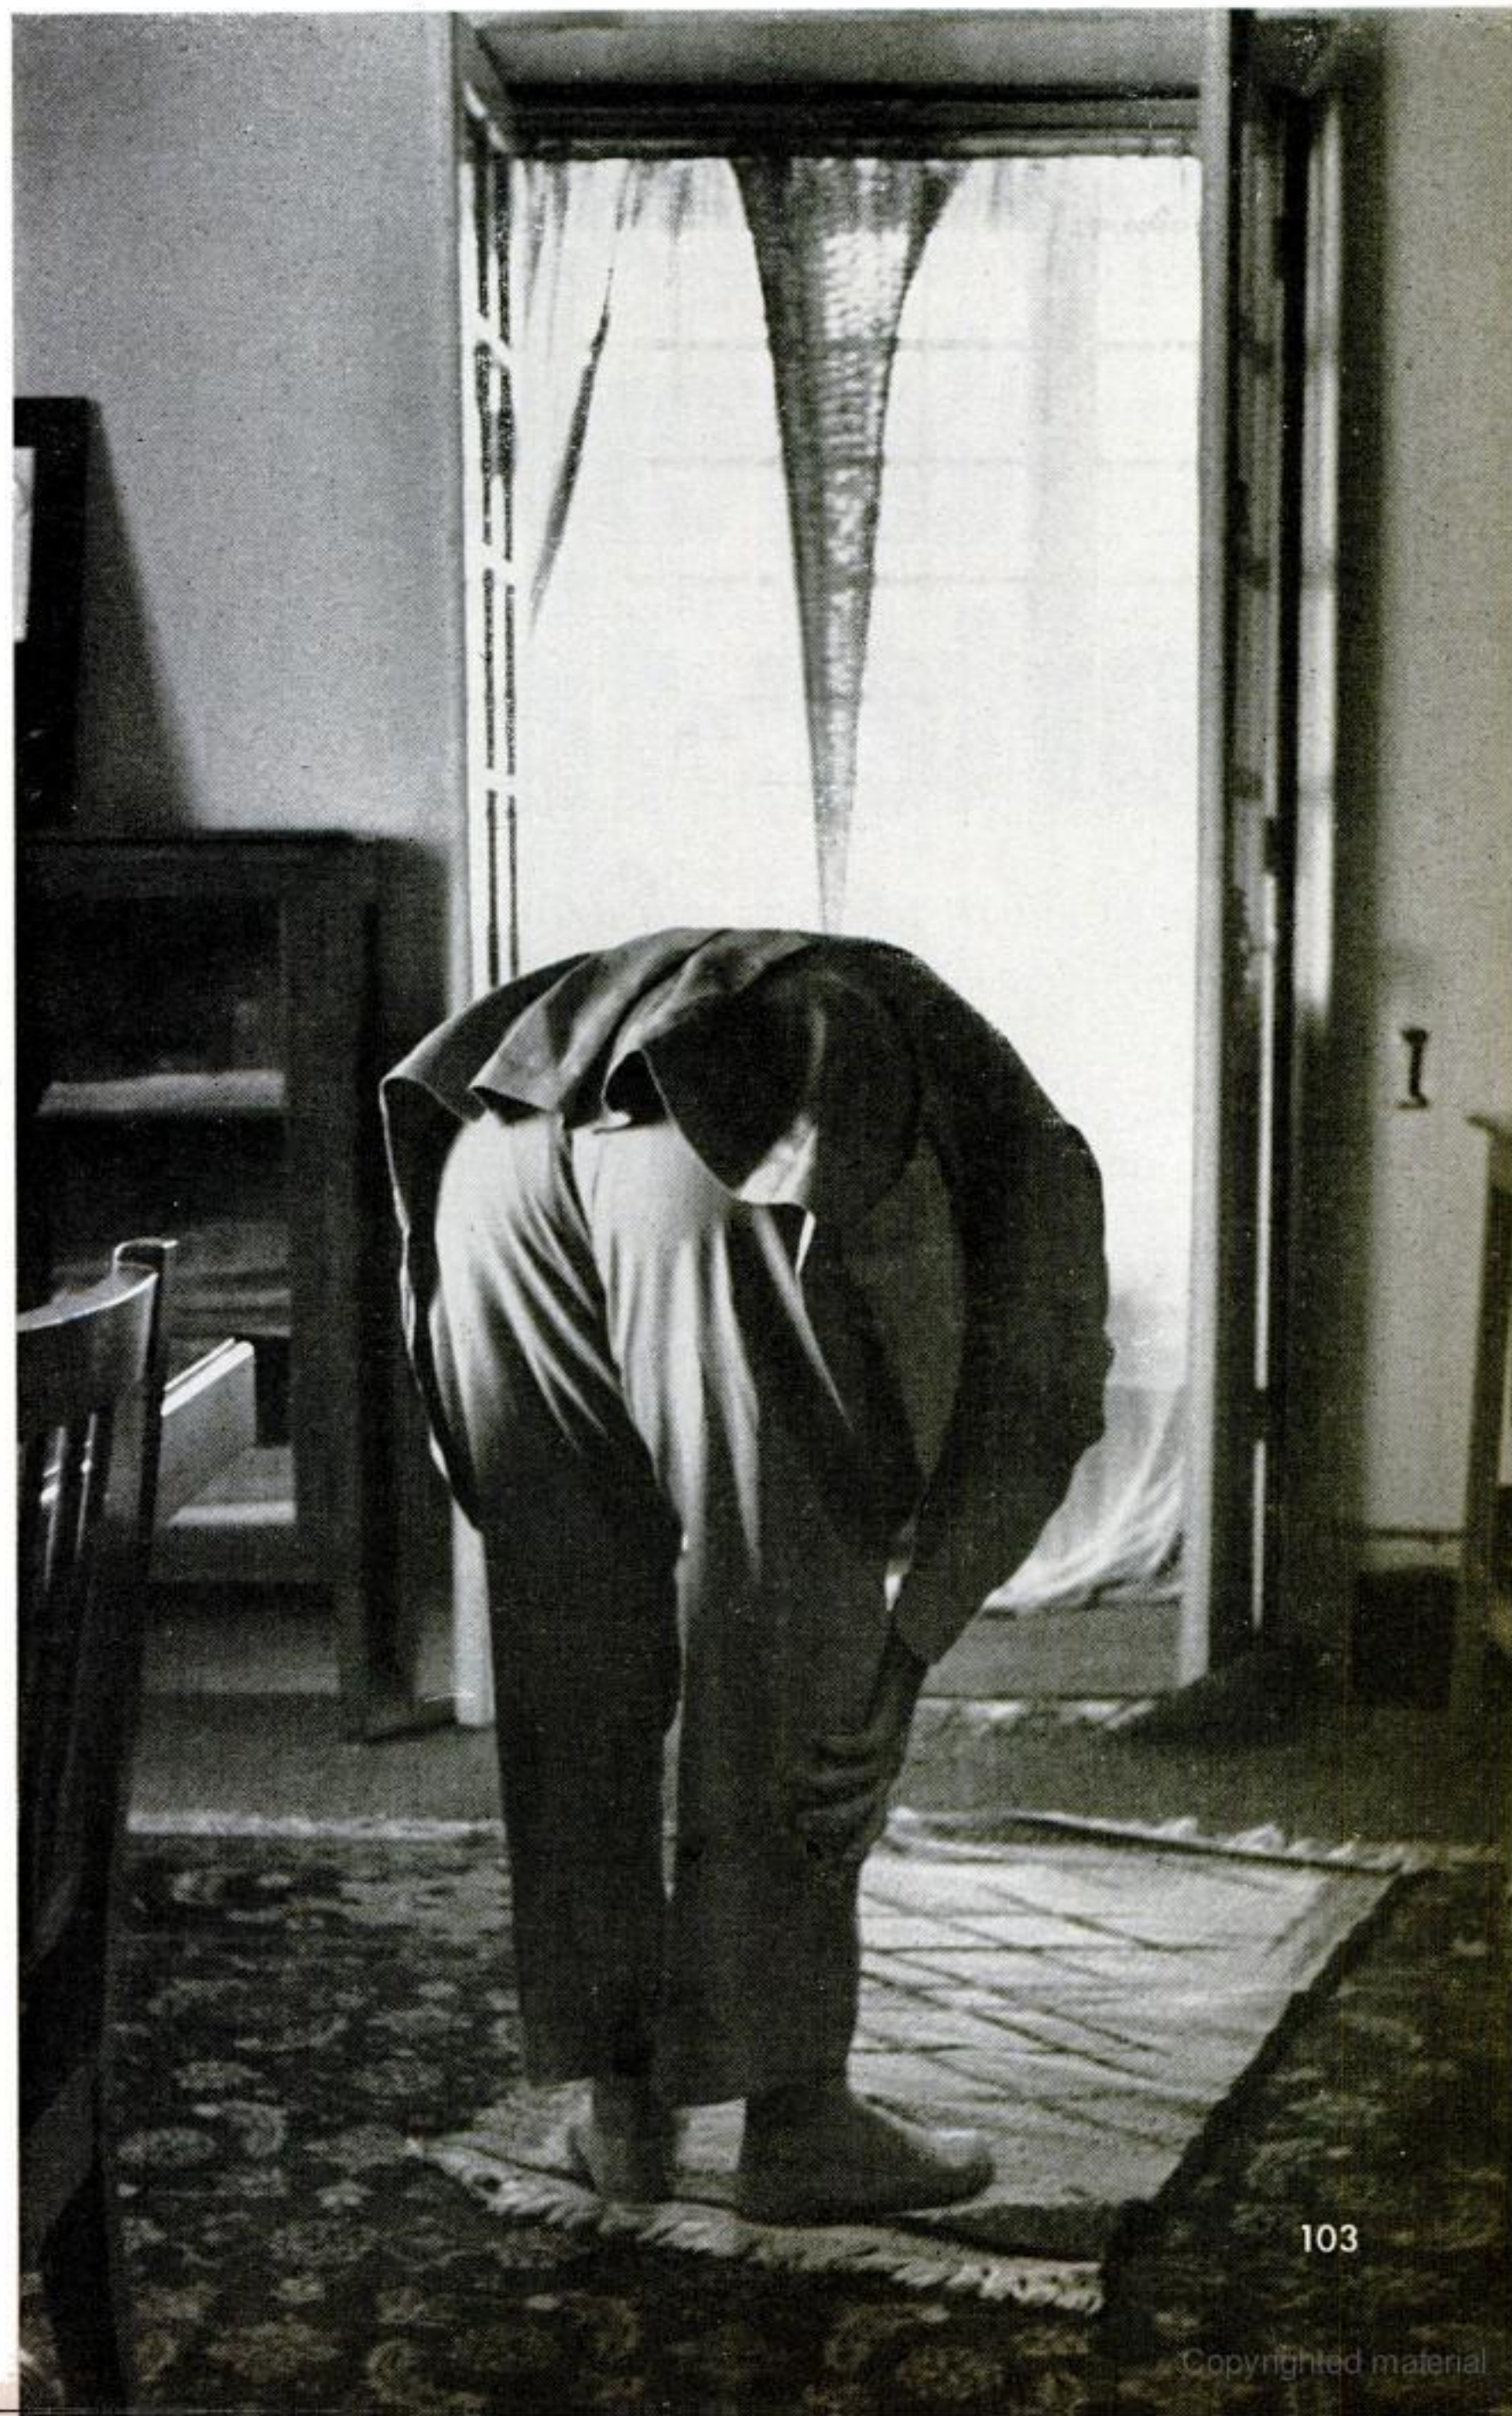

We were a handful of men whose hearts were full of faith. We were also men filled with the shame and humiliation forced upon us by the campaign in Palestine. We, as the soldiers of our nation, had responded to that call to duty across the Sinai Desert. As patriotic Egyptians we had marched to repulse an enemy threatening our eastern frontiers beyond Suez. Then, while fighting upon the burning sands of the desert, we learned that the enemy was lurking not only in the night before us, but also was entrenched in our cities behind us—traitors of our own blood. Weapons were delivered to our troops, but minus vital parts. Ammunition finally reached our supply dumps, but it would not fire. Medical supplies for our wounded, and there were many, came through to us in pitiful quantities. Many items of field equipment, desperately needed by fighting men, never arrived at all. In truth we were surrounded. Fears, which we had sensed only vaguely in our peacetime barracks before the campaign, became real. Now, for sure, we knew that those who directed our affairs in the campaign were men who had sold themselves, their countrymen and even their own sons, to the devil.

The infamy upon which they had been nourished and their own evil souls encouraged them even more to betray their country. Yet it also, for the first time, brought into being small groups of officers united to challenge the traitors—men of Egypt determined to avenge their lost comrades and to deliver their homeland from the grip of those who so cruelly trafficked with their own honor and the lives of their countrymen.

We were bitter that our country should be kicked into the dust of the road. We decided to dedicate ourselves to the rebirth of its dignity. But even then we tried to change things before we started to move. We circulated pamphlets telling the people how black our history had become. We tried to warn the king to regain his reason. But with all of his power, with all of the evil behind him—evil which pushed him, then stood beside him—the tyrant tried to crush the flame and to put it out. His foul forces still continued their injustice. They fought virtue, protected vices, and the reign became a symbol of graft, corruption and lust. They crushed the reputation of Egypt and they made this country known as a part of the world not fit for independence or a proud clean life.

Yet our small voice still spoke out to defend the country—full of faith that in our hearts remained the strength to meet and defeat the powers of evil. But the tyrant's ears were as of stone, his eyes as of ice. He scorned these warnings and called their authors "children."

Then a simple event took place. Elections for the general committee of our officers' club were held. The king tried to dominate even this part of our lives. His candidate, Major General Hussein Sirry Amer, was a man considered by many to be totally unfit to wear our uniform. He had been mentioned, time and again, in connection with the traffic of drugs and the illicit sale of state lands. Many officers wondered about his connection with the arms scandal of the Palestine campaign. We rejected him . . . and the king.

The king was livid, and his pride was hurt that there should exist in Egypt a group of men who would defy him. He reacted by intriguing to trap these soldiers and to eliminate them. He ordered a general assembly of the members of the officers' club to change its constitution, permitting his will to prevail. Another defeat had been suffered and it shattered his sense of proportion. He plotted disaster for all who opposed him. Driven by hatred, he dissolved the fairly elected General Committee of the club. This, too, was a simple issue. But it was now the beginning of the end.

We soldiers of Egypt looked to the heavens. We asked that the light of Allah show us the proper path to take. We prepared for something great. Then we looked again to Allah, and asked, "When will it be—our day of struggle—our day of liberation—our day when You will shelter us?"

Each day we worked with our units going through normal routines and exercises. But each evening it was different. Small groups of officers met to decide the part each would take when The Sign appeared. The plan was simple and easy, yet strong and decisive. All measures were taken to anticipate the steps the tyrant might take. The next time he tried to impose his foolish, selfish will

Will you leave these to your children?

Men have died to leave you these 4 symbols of freedom:

A Holy Bible—symbol of your right to worship as you wish.

(First Amendment, U. S. Constitution)

A door key—your right to lock your door against illegal government force and prying.

(Fourth Amendment, U. S. Constitution)

A pencil—freedom to speak or write what you think, whether you agree with the government or not.

(First Amendment, U. S. Constitution)

And a free ballot—your right to choose the people who represent you in government—your protection against government tyranny.

(Article I, U. S. Constitution)

HALF the world is trying to destroy these symbols—and what they stand for.

Even in this country, there are people who attack our freedoms, by trying to give the government more and more control over American life.

"The government should take over the doctors," they say, "and run the railroads, and the electric companies." But what they mean is, "Let's have socialized medicine, socialized railroads, socialized electricity."

Even though socialism is one thing most Americans don't want!

It is wise for us always to question and weigh the forces that influence our government. It's up to us all whether we'll leave our children freedom—or socialism.

Socialized electric light and power is one of the first goals of the people who want to push America down the hill to socialism. They've made headway, and are working for more. Each step they gain is a serious threat to every home and farm and business—and everybody's freedom. That's why this message is brought to you by America's ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER COMPANIES.

against the best interests of the country we would be ready. We took an oath that we would liberate the nation from tyranny, humiliation and disgrace—or die.

We called ourselves the Dobbat el Ahrar, which means "The Free Officers." Except for myself there was no man involved who held rank higher than lieutenant colonel; most were junior officers. None had any connection with any political party or religious group, like the Moslem Brotherhood. Plans for the coup were discussed with me, then left in the hands of nine officers called the Central Committee. Even I did not know who they all were, although later, after I had been called to take over as commander in chief, I learned that my liaison contact man had been one of the Committee. Thus, in times when the tentacles of the tyrant were everywhere, maximum security was achieved. Yet at that time we swore no oath of secrecy to protect us and our plan. We depended upon the honor and moral dignity of each officer involved.

THE GENERAL'S FOLLOWERS have a great affection for him. In the picture at left, a Sudanese captain suggests a new insignia for the coast guard caps. Two grieving women (center) bring him a sad reminder of the Palestine his name; Youssef, 10, who likes Western hats and whom Naguib calls "cow-boy"; and Ali, 12, who is a sharp shot with an air rifle. Naguib's wife, by Moslem custom, does not make public appearances. His daughter died last year.

As the movement grew we did check most carefully upon each man before taking him into our fullest confidence. As in all nations and all armies, there were some who could not be depended upon until we had assured them of victory. Even of your own Revolution in 1776 it has been written that only one third of the population of the Colonies was willing to risk rebellion with rifles.

At lower levels contact was made only indirectly with the man. No mention was made of any actual plan, nor of the officers of the Central Committee who were at that moment mapping every move to be made when the opportunity offered. Instead, our efforts were directed at inspiring each man, preparing him morally for the day when he might help break the grip of the tyrant who was strangling our profession—and nation.

The actual plan of liberation drawn up by the Central Committee involved very few men, for there was no real enemy as there is in battle. It was only a matter of seizure of key points within the military, then of replacing highly placed officers of questionable sympathies with carefully selected personnel. Other points within war; they are aunt and mother of a man who was killed while serving beside Naguib. At right, an amputee rushes up and embraces him. Egypt's "strong man" smiled shyly, said to Duncan, "This is one of my boys from Palestine."

A CAMEL CORPS VETERAN, Naguib inspects the mounts of the Royal Frontier Corps at their desert base outside Cairo. He once commanded this outfit, and although he inspected everything with a tough, brusque efficiency, he also kept stopping to greet old comrades by name. Most were enlisted men.

the city of Cairo had to be isolated at the same moment to protect our flanks. By this time, too, we had local committees of dedicated officers, by necessity few in number, organized within every branch of the armed forces. Each corps (artillery, armor, infantry) was represented, as were the air and naval forces. All were waiting for The Sign. All were ready.

Crises spur the coup

THEN two crises struck the country in rapid succession. Hussein Sirry (ex-Pasha; all such titles have now been abolished), one of the true moderates in Egyptian public life, was asked by the king to assume the office of prime minister and to form a cabinet. That was on the 2nd of July. Perhaps because of his knowledge of the affection some of the men in our army are said to hold for me, especially the veterans from Palestine, he asked the king to appoint me as his minister of war. The throne rejected the appointment. Hussein Sirry refused to assume his high office and his government fell on July 21.

That same day the throne asked Ahmed Naguib el Hilaly (ex-Pasha) to become prime minister and to form his cabinet. Perhaps the signs of the times were reflected in the appointment of his minister of war, Ismail Sherine, brother-in-law of the king and a civilian imposed upon the army with the rank of colonel. The members of the Central Committee felt it was not only a sign of the times, but The Sign from above.

Orders went out from the Central Committee to every group of Free Officers in the Egyptian forces. Zero Hour was set for 1:30 the morning of July 24. Then, because rumors of disturbances within the army had been whispered all over Egypt for three or four days, it was decided to move Z-Hour up one full day, to 1:30 of the 23rd. Allah was guiding us, for sure.

The Master Plan began to unfold. Like their ancestors of the desert, the young men of Egypt began to move quietly and well. They began arriving individually at their camps, with orders to be ready and in position by 2330 Tuesday night, July 22. Then, at 2300, word flashed to the Central Committee that there was good reason to believe that the Plan had been discovered. A young officer, while leaving his home, had been seen by two men whose sympathies he questioned. They had stopped him for a moment when they saw that he was armed. He felt sure that in his nervousness he had not given them sufficiently casual answers to their equally casual queries. He was right. At that very moment the informers were contacting Lieut. General Hussein Farid, chief of staff of the army. But the officers of the Central Committee had faith in their Plan, and in Allah. They waited. Z-Hour was nearly upon them. Small groups of officers of their command were moving all over Cairo. They waited.

In the Master Plan the city of Cairo was divided into four sectors. To each sector the Central Committee assigned one team of four officers and two enlisted men. Each team had one jeep and one heavy-duty closed van. As the first objective of the Plan was to deny command leadership to the troops of the army, especially the armored corps, it was the duty of each team to arrest designated officers in their sectors. The number of these high-ranking officers averaged eight to 10 for each sector. Upon reaching the home of each officer, two of the Free Officers were to enter the house to make the arrest, while the other two and the enlisted men stayed below to cover the street. As each officer was arrested he was to be placed under guard in the closed van until a clean sweep of all designated officers in the sector had been made. After clearing the sector they were to be taken to the barracks section of the Military Academy and there detained until the entire Plan had been carried out. When Z-Hour struck these plans worked perfectly.

Other units were moving all around Cairo when Z-Hour arrived. Phase One was in operation. Cordons of hand-picked troops surrounded all army barracks. They were supported by armored cars which were in radio contact with each other. It was imperative that all officers be prevented from reaching their troops where they might give orders. The troops themselves did not know that the orders they were taking and executing were being given by Free Officers or that they were participating in a coup. The Egyptian state broadcasting station, the central telephone exchange, the Cairo railroad terminal and the general headquarters of the Egyptian army all were occupied by infantry supported by armored cars. Tanks were called in to dominate strategic points within the city, and also to make a show of strength. Resistance was not expected, yet a demonstration of power, and the support of the armored corps, seemed wise in order to prevent any possible trouble.

Cairo's airfields were surrounded by infantry, also supported by armored cars. They simply closed the entrances to prevent any undesirable persons from getting into the fields. There were no incidents, and the troops were removed at 1000 that morning after having screened the fields only during the rush hour of the early morning.

A great stroke of luck

IN the meantime we had our first great stroke of luck. Chief of Staff Lieut. General Hussein Farid, upon receiving the tip of the informers, ordered Brigadier Hassan Hishmat, commander of the armored corps, to investigate any possible disturbances among his men. Instead of telephoning, or issuing any warning or alert, the chief of staff played right into our hands. Hishmat was captured as soon as he approached his troops' barracks, then was locked in the mess. The Cairo area commander, Major General Ali Naguib, my own brother, was arrested in the same manner. The chief of staff himself was arrested in his general headquarters,

THE ARMY TAKES OVER as jeeps and tanks roll down a Cairo street. The coup started at midnight, and by the time the people awoke, it was all over.

after token resistance had been put up by his sentries. Two men were but slightly wounded. There were no other shots fired in the capture of Cairo.

One incident in Phase One raised a considerable problem for the officers of the Central Committee as soon as they knew that their Plan was working. They wished to notify the foreign missions in Cairo that there was no cause for alarm, that the operation was just a long overdue housecleaning by the Egyptian armed forces. But being relatively junior officers, none had had any direct contact with any of the foreigners. Then one officer remembered an American he had met socially some time earlier. Thus, Assistant Air Attaché Lieut. Colonel David Evans, of the American Embassy, was the first foreigner to be notified by the Central Committee of the coup. It was known that Mr. Jefferson Caffery, the American ambassador, was in Alexandria, the summer capital. Had he been in Cairo, even though none of us knew him, we would have advised him personally, to reassure him, for he has been one of those men who has given his whole heart to his work here in Egypt, and—in my opinion—has become known as the best American ambassador we have ever had.

Call that came too late

AN incident more amusing than serious occurred at 0400, Wednesday morning of July 23. I received a telephone call in my quarters from the officers of the Central Committee. They were requesting that I take over as commander in chief of the Armed Forces of Egypt. I had just accepted when the telephone rang once more. It was a long distance call from Alexandria, from Mortada el Maraghi, minister of interior in the cabinet of Ahmed Naguib el Hilaly. He said that he had heard reports of strange activities in Cairo; would I please go out to see if it might be interpreted as anything serious, then report back to him if it seemed necessary. I assured him Hader Afendem (Aye, Aye, Sir), then went out to take command of the coup. It really seemed like a waste of money to call back, for his cabinet fell that afternoon.

At 0720, Wednesday, July 23, it was obvious that the Plan had succeeded. Cairo was under the complete control of the Free Officers. Everything was quiet. Thus a broadcast was made in my name over the Egyptian State Radio Station, telling the population of the coup, warning any possible troublemakers that my troops had orders to shoot on sight anyone seen looting or attempting civil disturbances, and reassuring the foreigners in Cairo that their security and well-being were guaranteed. In order that there be no misunderstanding we requested that the air force supply constant reconnaissance over Cairo, as of daybreak that first morning. All roads leading into the city, from the desert and the delta, were under steady observation. Six heavy bombers circled overhead. Flights of fighter jets shrieked over the minarets of the city. It was a show of strength, just as we had made with the tanks, but, like the tanks, the planes were all armed and combat loaded. Phase One was finished.

Phase Two began immediately. A list of demands was transmitted to the throne, the most important of which was that Aly

Maher (ex-Pasha) be named prime minister, for he alone was thought capable of cleansing our government. It also ordered that a cleanup be made at the top levels of the army, that the constitution be retained and applied and that the entourage around the court be ejected.

Never before was the throne so prompt when dealing with the army. Ahmed Naguib el Hilaly's cabinet fell that afternoon, less than 24 hours after coming into office. Aly Maher was asked to take over the office of prime minister. We knew then, for the first time, that the power of the tyrant had been beaten. Late that night of July 23, and in the early hours of the 24th, the Central Committee and I decided to make a final effort to rid Egypt of her ills by going right to the source itself. We resolved to march on Alexandria and drive Farouk from the throne.

By 0700 that Friday morning of the 25th, the officer in charge of plans and operations of the Central Committee was in Alexandria scouting the terrain for the siege of the city. It was not then known in which of the two royal palaces, Montazah or Ras el Tin, the king might be found. Even the possibility that he might be living in the royal wing of the respected Fuad Hospital (where he sometimes retired to enjoy himself) was investigated. He was found in Ras el Tin Palace, but to make sure that there be no slip, at the final moment, plans were made to lay siege to both palaces.

Phase Three began. At noon I flew to Alexandria. Aly Maher had been sworn in as prime minister. My troops were constantly arriving, by rail and road, from Cairo. The army garrison of Alexandria was with us. There was neither sabotage nor interference of any kind. Zero Hour was intended for that afternoon, but some of the troops were delayed on the desert road from Cairo, so the time was switched to 0730 Saturday, July 26. During that night of July 25 two officers of the Central Committee drafted the final ultimatum to Farouk. It was to be handed him after my forces had laid siege to his palace next morning.

Z-Hour, Saturday, July 26, found my troops in position against both Montazah and Ras el Tin palaces. Farouk was in Ras el Tin, as our operations officer had reported. The order of battle was that my tanks face the palace walls, supported by infantry, supported by artillery. Such were the plans, and so were they to be carried out... except for one small mistake—but a so happy one.

An officer misinterpreted his orders. He led his infantrymen out in front of his tanks. Worse, he kept advancing his men in skirmish positions. O beautiful mistake! He had nearly reached the harem quarters of the palace when palace sentries in a machine gun post turned and saw the advancing soldiers. In their excitement they fired a few bursts, probably by accident, at the officer and his men who, it is said, burrowed like asps into the sand. For the following few minutes lead sang as the wind through the palace windows. Finally, only by standing alone, with outspread arms in front of his men did the officer stop the shooting. It must have been a sight indeed. Again it had been only token resistance. Six casualties for them . . . two for us—all minor. But much more important, it left no doubt remaining in tyrant Farouk's mind about the nature of our early morning call.

My command post during this last morning was in the summer general headquarters, at Mustapha Pasha Barracks. We were in constant wireless and telephone contact with the troops. Since Z-Hour at 0730 all plugs at that central telephone exchange had been pulled so that no calls might be made from the palace without our knowledge. Our ultimatum was to be delivered by Prime Minister Aly Maher at 0900. The time lapse of one and one-half hours was quite intentional, for we felt that it might be psychologically beneficial for Farouk to have some time for quiet thought.

Overhead Gloster Meteor and de Havilland Vampire jets, carrying rockets and 20-mm cannon, flew constant cover on the two palaces. Above them were flights of four-engine bombers loaded with demolition bombs. There was radio air-ground control at all times. We felt that he might try to slip away, either by sea or the desert road to Libya. In case he tried to escape by air another flight of Hawker Furies was alerted for interception. He remained in his palace.

At 0900 I called upon the prime minister at his official residence in the Bulkley quarter of Alexandria to give him the ultimatum for transmission to the king. Aly Maher went to Ras el Tin Palace and was admitted immediately. It was then 0915, Saturday, July 26. I returned to my command post to await word from the prime minister. His call came at 1100. King Farouk had accepted and signed an ultimatum from the Free Officers of the Egyptian army which demanded 1) that he sign his abdication of the throne of Egypt as of 1200 hours that same day, and 2) that he leave Egypt, forever, as of 1800 hours that same evening. I went immediately

It was years later that Henry Jones learned

the price of a pony

"ONE GOOD THING about us is that we don't have to worry about keeping up with the Joneses. We are the Joneses!"

That was one of Oscar Jones' favorite little jokes, and my Dad said he'd heard Oscar tell it a dozen times or more. But Dad also said it didn't keep Oscar Jones from doing his best to keep up with the Smiths, the Browns and a lot of other people in town.

For instance, when one of Oscar Jones' friends bought a big house down on Church Street, it wasn't long before Oscar bought an even bigger one. When another traded in his old car for a big, low-slung foreign car, Oscar Jones went right out and did the same. And when his son Henry left for the university in 1936, nothing would do for Oscar but to send his boy off in style in a shiny new roadster of his own. I went along with Henry, and was convinced—as I'm sure everyone else in town was—that Oscar Jones was a pretty rich man.

It was during our junior year that Henry got word that his father died. He went home for a week or so to look after things—and never came back.

As I learned afterwards, all Oscar Jones left his family was a big house they couldn't keep up, a powerful car that didn't bring much at the used car lot, and a good many miscellaneous debts that Henry and his mother were hard-pressed to pay.

I lost track of Henry Jones for quite a few years after that, so I was a little surprised to find him waiting for me when I got to my office one morning last week. After a few minutes of general conversation he looked around and said, "I was in this office once before. That was back in the days when your father was an agent for New York Life, as you are now. I was only a kid then, but I still remember it. When we started out that morning, Dad had some money with him to pay the first premium on a policy your father had sold him.

"Well, on the way down we passed a place where they had a pony for sale. I wanted that pony more than anything—and that's where the money went.

Dad wouldn't take the policy that day in spite of everything your father said.

"It wasn't until I had to leave the university that I understood why your Dad had urged mine so strongly to change his mind about the policy. Then I realized how much that pony of mine had actually cost. I decided then that if I ever got married and had a family, I wouldn't make the same mistake."

Henry and I started working out his life insurance program then and there. A couple of days later he stopped in again and handed me a check for the first premium. "I didn't see any ponies this morning," he said.

I laughed and thanked him. He grinned and said, "Don't thank me—thank your father. He made this sale for you over twenty years ago."

to the residency of the prime minister to examine the signature of acceptance on the ultimatum. It was valid and correct. Farouk was finished as the tyrant of Egypt.

Just before returning to the residency with the ultimatum, Prime Minister Aly Maher sat with Farouk in the Bab el Malek (Gate of the King) in Ras el Tin Palace. Outside, in the streets, a surprising thing was taking place. A young American, Robert Simpson, the aide to Ambassador Caffery, kept trying to force his way in his car through my cordons around the palace. He was most determined. I gave orders that he be permitted to pass. We know that he went immediately to the Bab el Malek. Farouk was apparently a beaten man. We know that both Farouk and Aly Maher were sitting alone side by side when Farouk motioned to the American and said, "Come. Come. I've never been so glad to see anyone in my life. We haven't much time. I have two things I want you to tell your ambassador." Aly Maher just sat there, with the time running out, and said not a word. He knew that our deadline of 1200 was final. Then Farouk added, "Ask him if he will do everything possible to save my life. If he does, will he come to say goodbye." Then the American left, and Prime Minister Aly Maher returned to his residence to draw up the papers of abdication. It seems rather strange, remembering how we felt about you Americans when many of your citizens were sending arms and money to Israel, but now both the throne and the Free Officers turned first to you.

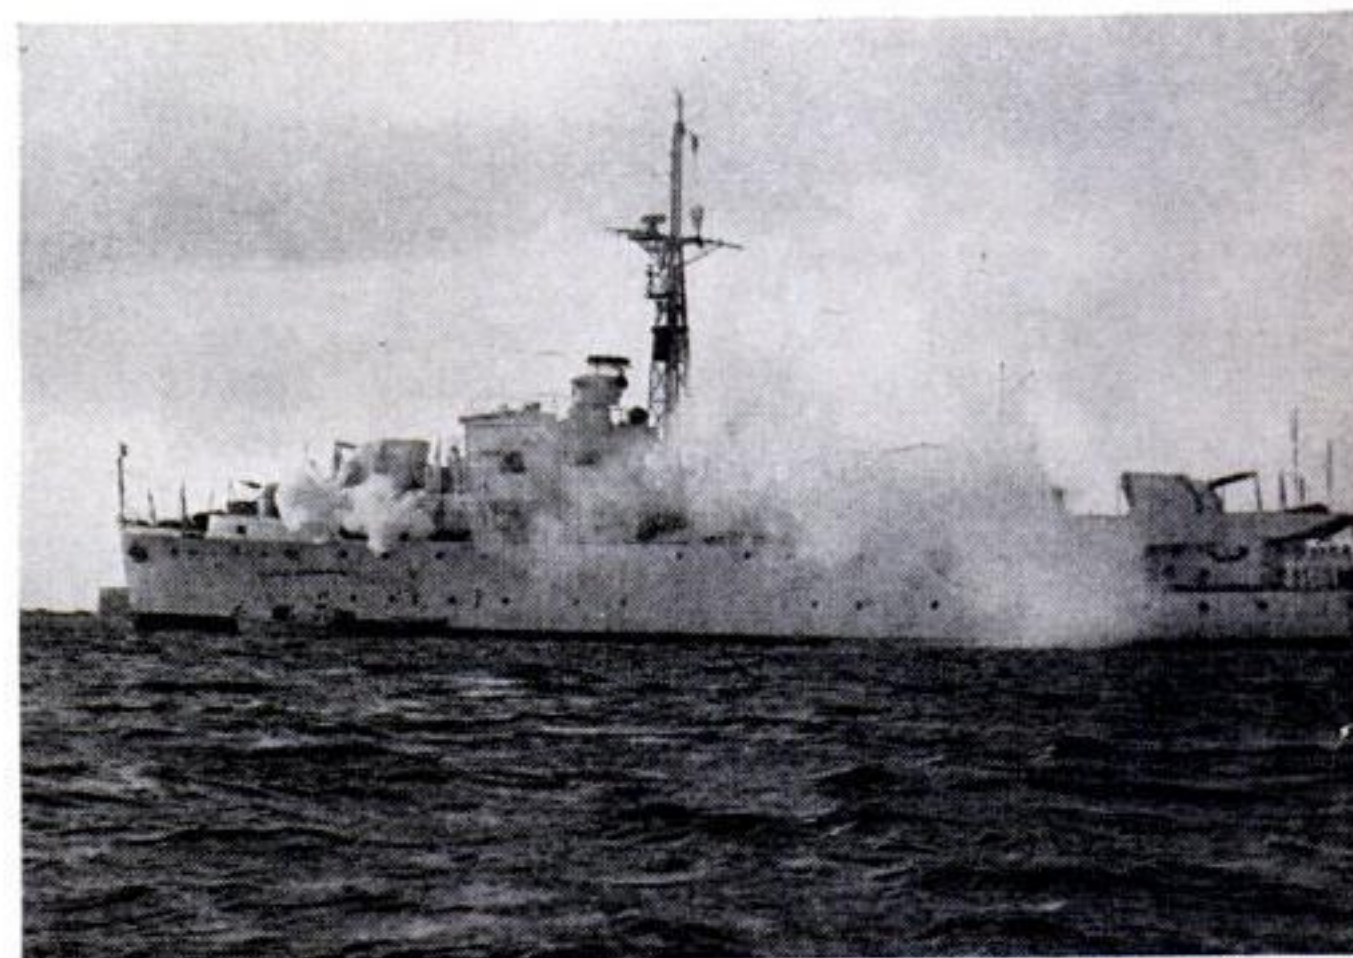

Salute for the throne

BECAUSE Farouk had been king of Egypt until 1200 that day we decided to accord him full honors upon his departure, not because of him as an individual, but because of our respect for the throne. At 1735 Farouk sent Queen Narriman, his three daughters and infant King Fuad II to the waiting royal yacht Mahroussa. Farouk remained inside Ras el Tin where he stood waiting out his last few minutes in Egypt. With him were Prime Minister Aly Maher, Princess Faiza and her husband Ali Raouf, Princess Fawzia and her husband Ismail Sherine, the American ambassador, Mr. Jefferson Caffery, representing all foreign missions in Egypt, and his aide, Robert Simpson. We made no effort to place officers in the king's private quarters of the palace at this moment.

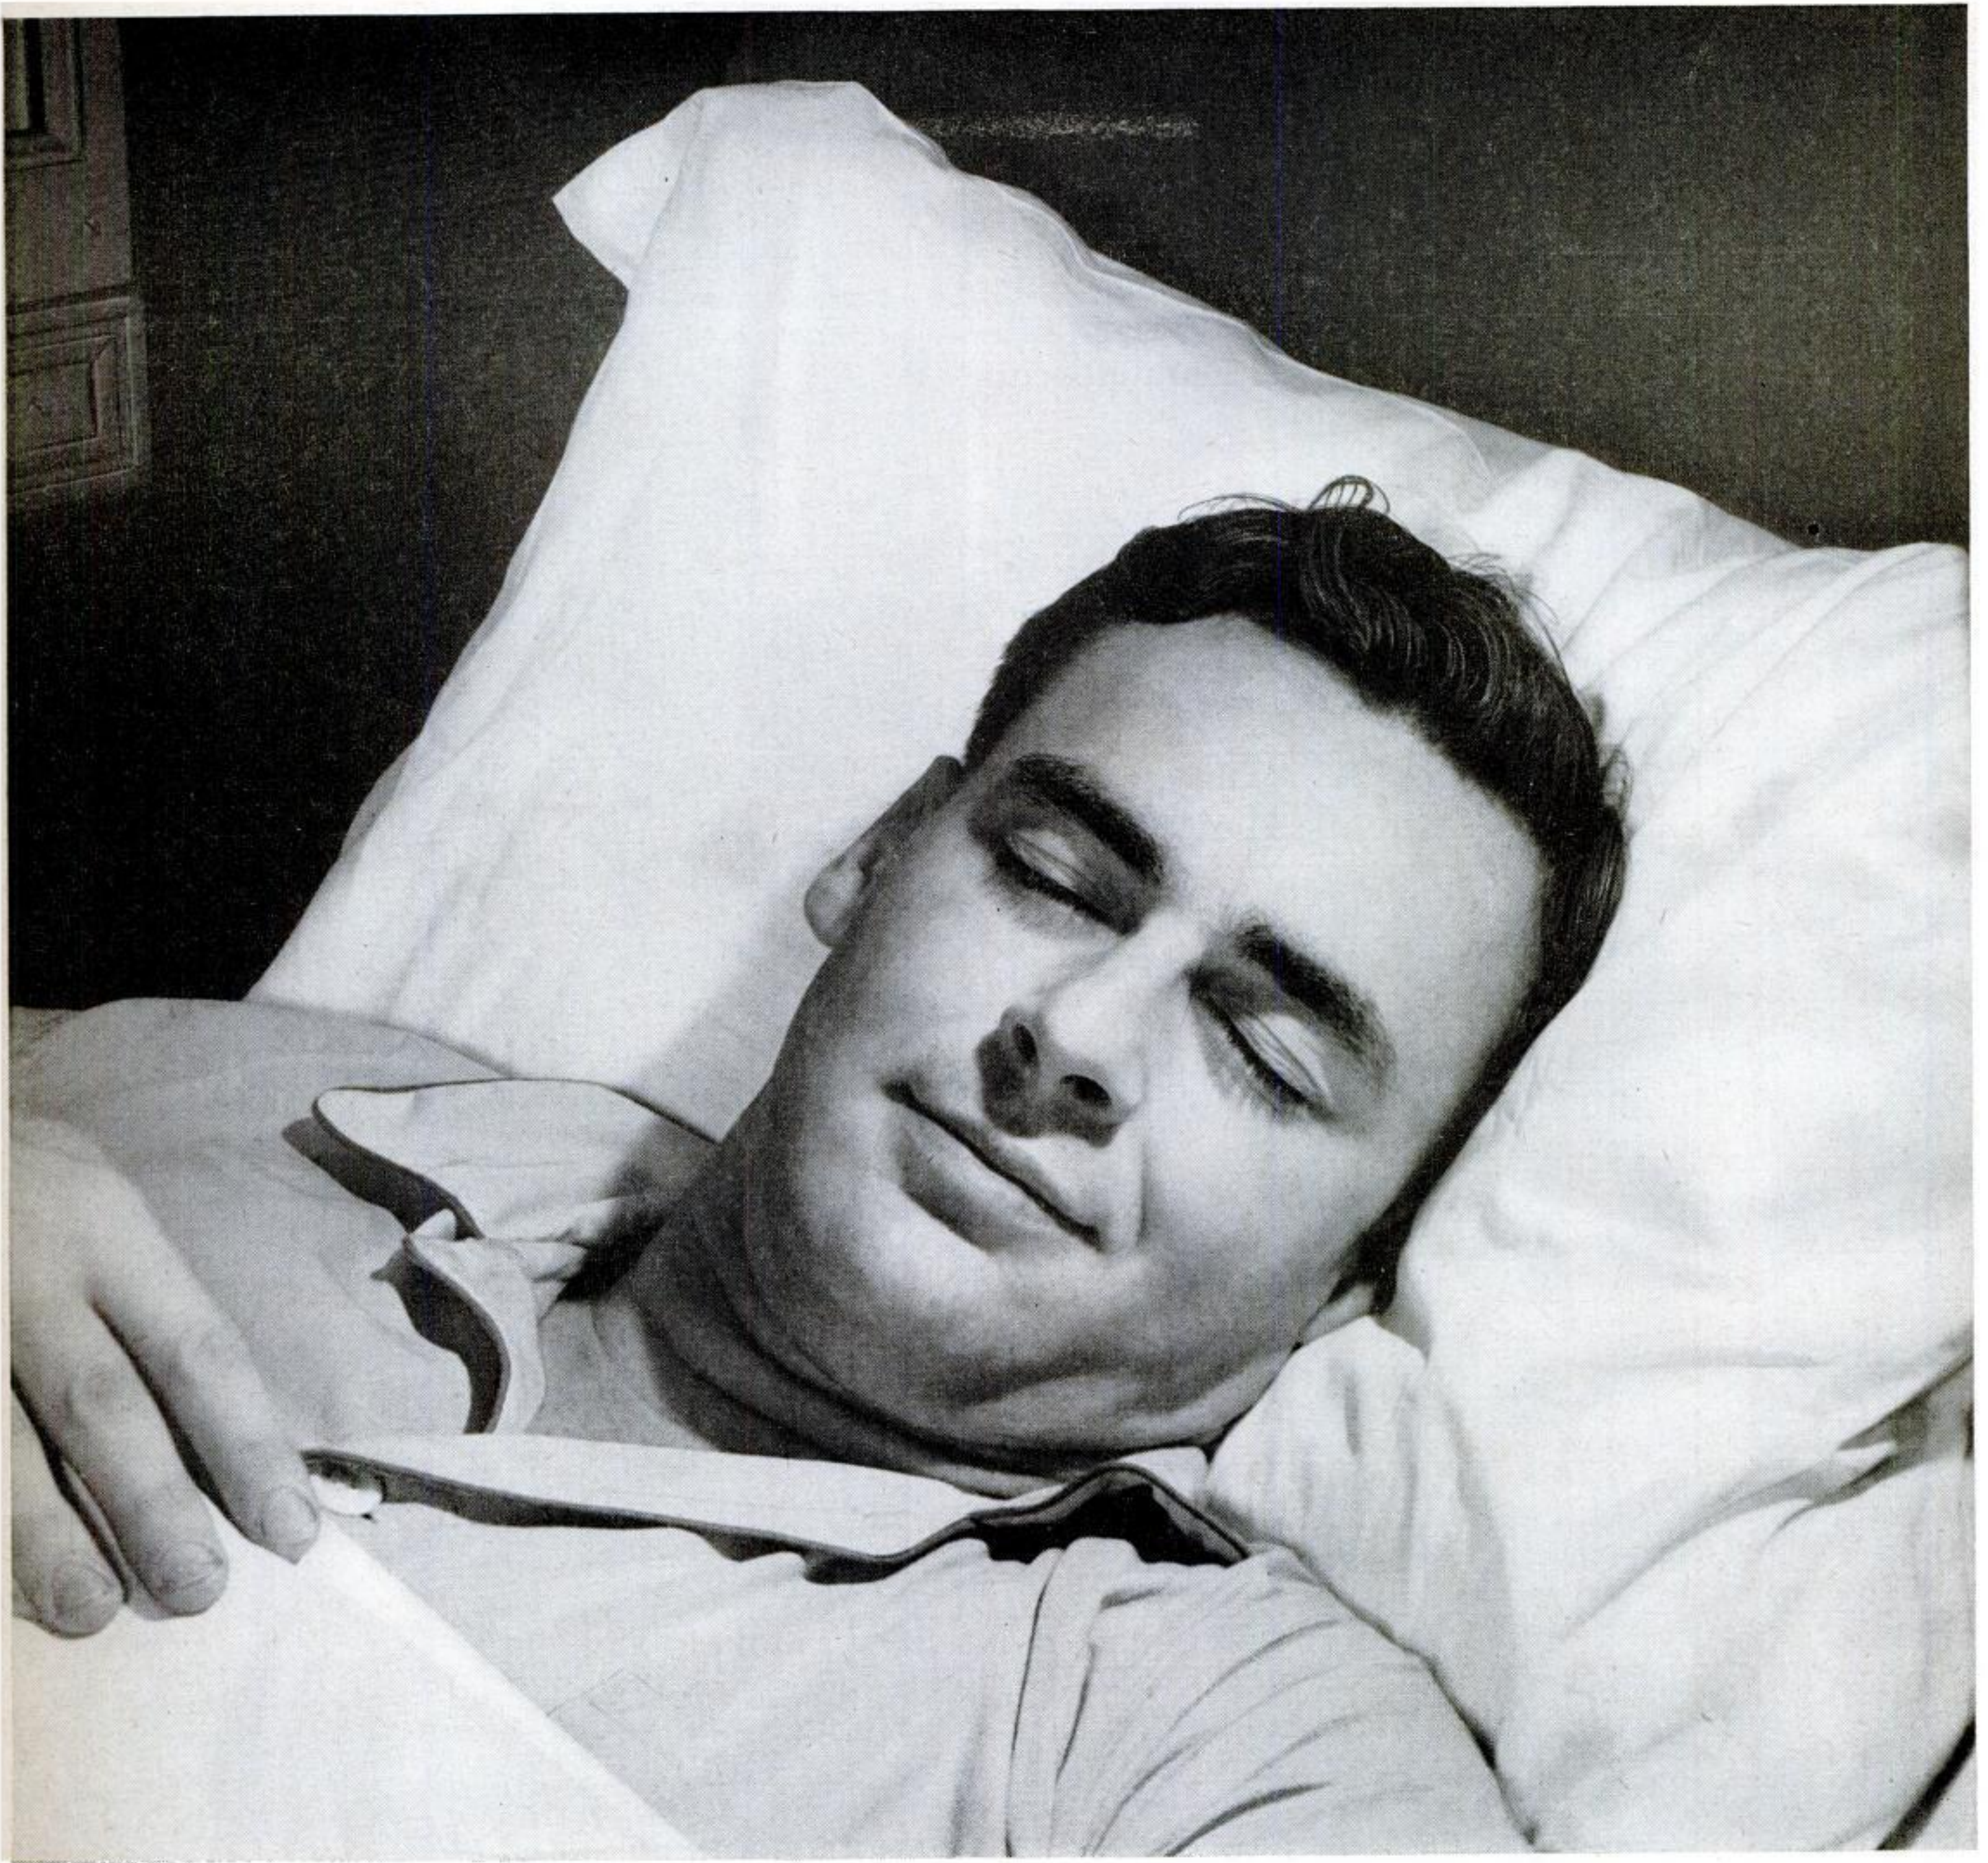

Farouk said goodbye to his sisters while still in the palace; then he, with Aly Maher, Mr. Caffery, Ismail Sherine and Simpson, walked to the elevator, rode down to the first floor and walked out toward the royal pier where a cutter was waiting to carry Farouk to the Mahroussa. The royal standard dipped and the palace band played our national anthem as he stepped out upon the pier. In true Egyptian fashion the faithful servants of the palace set up a wail of lament that must have been deafening to hear. Over it all 21 guns fired their parting, royal salute.

My officers saluted as he passed slowly along the pier. Finally, alone, he stood at the end, dressed in the gleaming white uniform of an admiral of Egypt. He apparently seemed without emotion as he stood there. His eyes were on his wristwatch. Precisely at 1800 hours he raised his eyes, stepped aboard the cutter and was carried to the Mahroussa.

At 1804 I arrived at Ras el Tin. A launch was waiting to carry me to the royal yacht. There, I said goodbye to Mr. Farouk.

FAREWELL TO FAROUK, a salute of 21 guns, is fired by Egyptian navy ship as the royal yacht carries him out of Alexandria harbor for the last time.

IN OLD GRAVEYARD on Long Island, Cooke copies inscriptions for an essay on colonial history.

A DOTING FATHER, Cooke reads to his 4-year-old daughter Susie. He devotes Saturdays to his son, daughter and two stepchildren, playing records for them or taking them to Wild West movies.

A Cooke's Look at America

HOW A 'VOICE TO BRITAIN' COMES FROM N.Y.

For their news and views of the U.S. nine million Englishmen depend on a witty, urbane ex-Englishman named Alistair Cooke. Now an American citizen living in New York, Cooke interprets the U.S.A. through a daily column in the Manchester Guardian and a weekly BBC broadcast called Letter from America. Cooke comments on American politics ("it's like a fantastic game of canasta") and on such big, startling events as the Alger Hiss trial, but mostly he likes to write little, intimate essays on American manners and morals, Indians, women, sports, or whatever strikes his fancy

(p. 122). He goes to Washington twice a month and once a year he tours the country. Otherwise he works out of his Fifth Avenue apartment and his summer home on Long Island, gathering his information in a most informal way by interviewing his grocer, his maid or a cabbie in the park. His insight into the American scene has been so penetrating that he was recently given the Peabody Award, radio's highest prize, and in November the Ford Foundation and CBS-TV will present him to American audiences as emcee of Omnibus, one of the most ambitious programs in TV history.

A HAIRCUT is given Cooke by wife. He has not been to a professional barber since he was married.

A CHAT with friend (left) and wife relaxes Cooke, who makes it a rule to stop working at 6:30 p.m.

AN INTERVIEW with newspaper dealer on Second Avenue helps Cooke get man-on-the-street view.

AT TELETYPE MACHINE installed at Long Island home, Cooke files a story to England while Susie waits for him to go swimming. Of summers in the U.S.,

Cooke wrote, "Of all the seasons, summer is the one that drains away the fierce energies of Americans and makes them a little more limp and a lot more lovable."

COOKE-ISMS ON THE U.S.

ON THE DEMOCRATIC CONVENTION. You may recall that the Democrats promised to have a "streamlined" convention. . . . But . . . the 1952 model looked like the old Democratic model of 1948, and surprisingly like the new 1952 Republican convertible: fenders dented, the left wing holding the right wing shaky and near to collapse.

ON BECOMING MIDDLE-AGED. The first time a pretty girl calls you "sir" is of course a catastrophe. When I met Ginger Rogers, she called me "Sir." I've never thought much of her as an actress ever since.

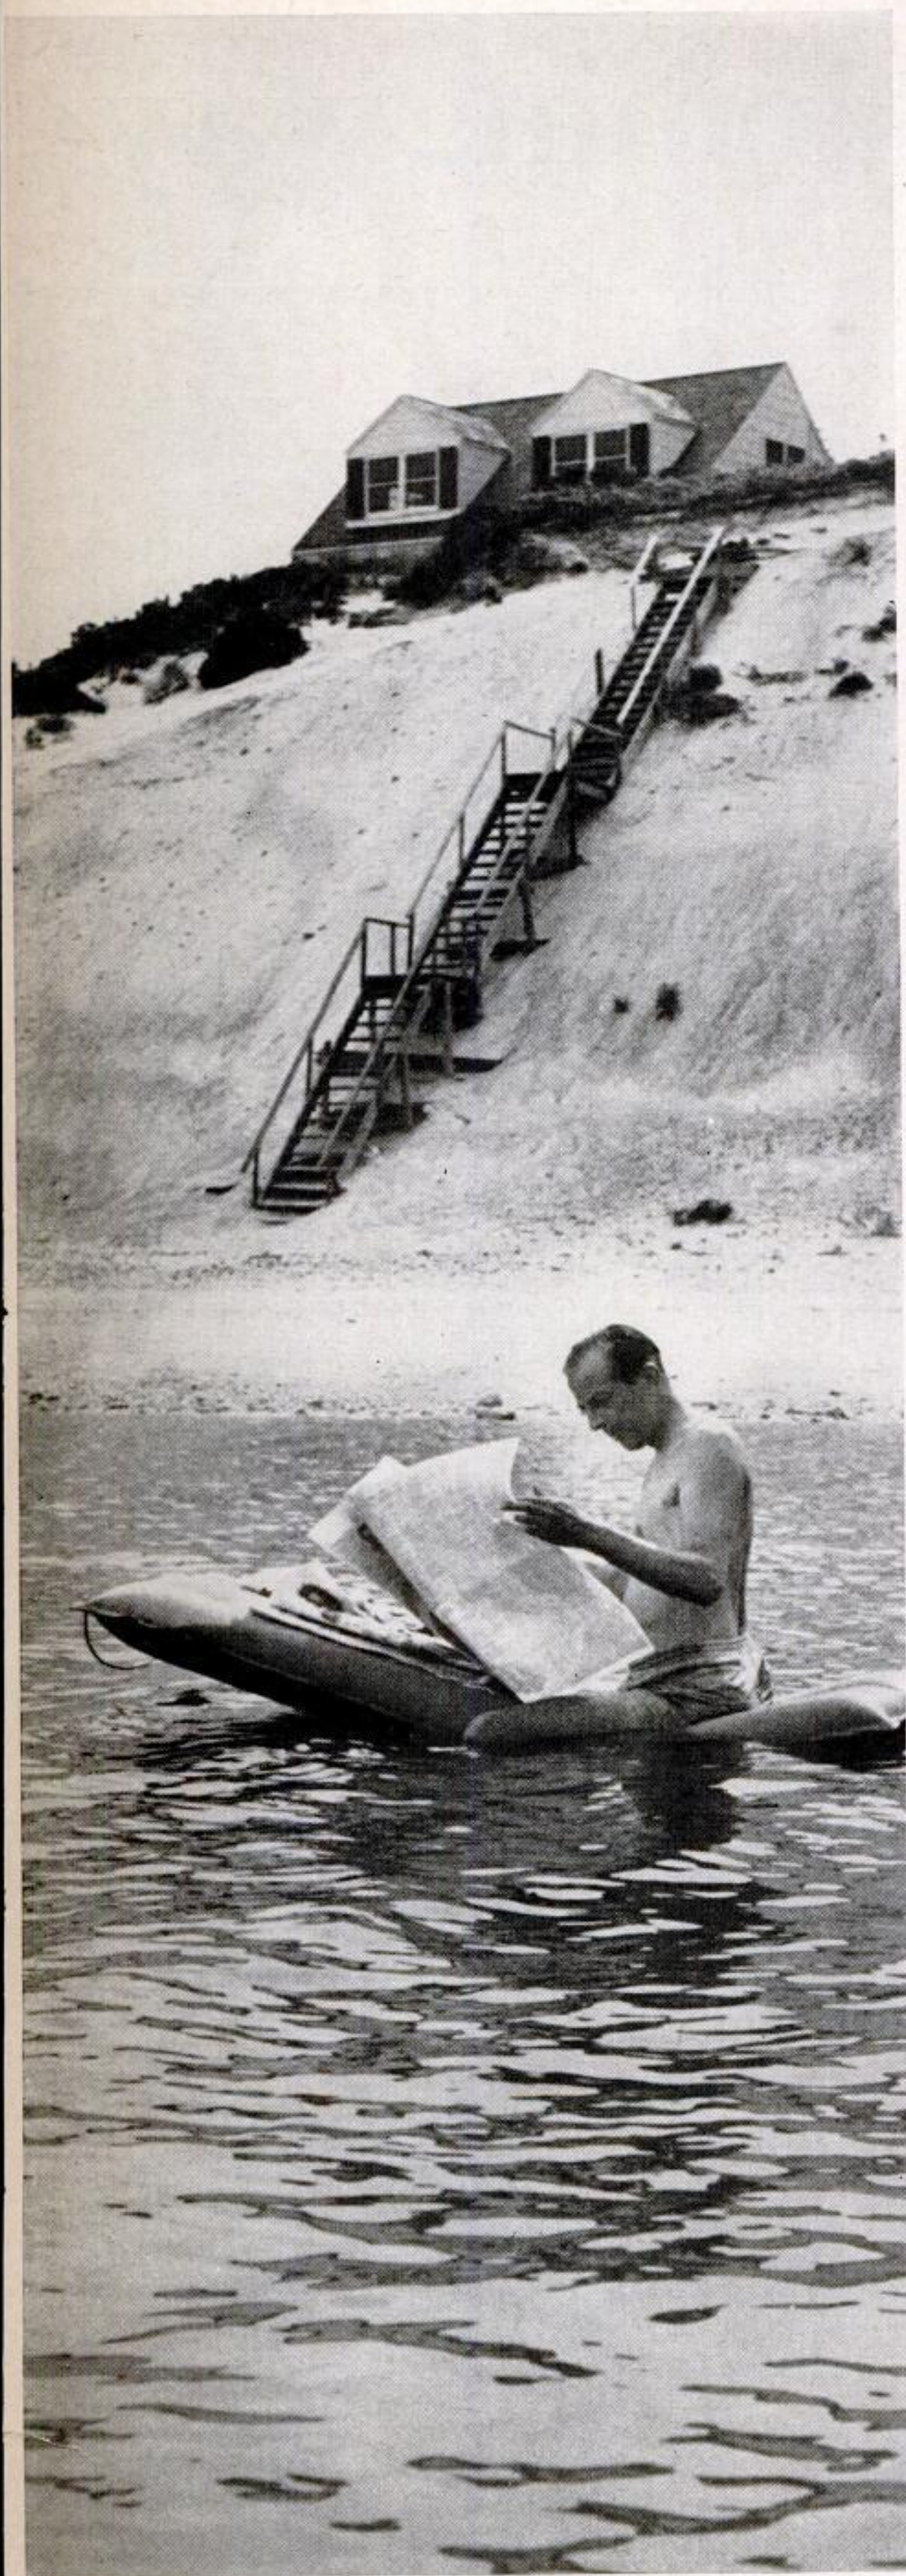

ON AMERICAN INGENUITY. When the Industrial Revolution hit America, it was not regarded as the special property of engineers and workmen: it was something that helped everybody with the mechanics of living. You no more thought of a motor car or a refrigerator as the specialty of housewives and engineers than you think of food as the specialty of a nutritionist. The result is that Americans talk less about their gadgets than the Europeans, who waste much of their leisure bemoaning them as vulgar temptations snaring you away from the life of the spirit.

ON GROWING UP. Maturity is a fighting word with Americans. Being one of the boys is more of a compliment.

ON AMERICAN ORATORY. It is very striking to a foreign newsman how Americans . . . have retained and even improved on the pulpit, voice-of doom manner which died in Britain, for instance, around the turn of the century. I once took an Englishman into the Senate, and he listened to a famous American, who was not sore at anybody or worried about anything. The Englishman . . . whispered after a while, "Is he all right?" I reassured him that the senator was in rude health, but that being a senator it was almost compulsory for him to sound like the Book of Job.

NEAR CENTRAL PARK Cooke observes couple in surrey with fringe on top. His broadcasts have recently been collected into book, One Man's America.

EVEN ON A RAFT Cooke follows the news. When he saw this picture, he groaned, "What a horselaugh this'll give the boys in the National Press Club."

From Ernest Hemingway To the Editors of LIFE

"I'm very excited about The Old Man and the Sea and that it is coming out in LIFE so that many people will read it who could not afford to buy it. That makes me much happier than to have a Nobel Prize. To have you guys being so careful and good about it and so thoughtful is better than any kind of prize. . . .

"Whatever I learned is in the story but I hope it reads simply and straight and all the things that are in it do not show but only are with you after you have read it. . . .

"I had wanted to write it for more than 15 years and I never did it because I did not think I could. . . . Now I have to try to write something better. That is sort of rough. But I had good luck with this all the way and maybe I will have luck again. . . .

"Don't you think it is a strange damn story that it should affect all of us (me especially) the way it does? I have had to read it now over 200 times and everytime it does something to me. It's as though I had gotten finally what I had been working for all my life. . . ."

A DECORATION FROM
'THE OLD MAN AND THE SEA,'
TO APPEAR IN NEXT WEEK'S LIFE

WE are not in the fiction business. Since 1936 we have worked hard to present a round account of what goes on in the world by means of photographs and whatever words were necessary to explain them, and we hope to go on doing so for a long time. But like all men and women we can be moved. We have been deeply moved, and suddenly it seems not only permissible but almost necessary to break our tradition. Ernest Hemingway has finished a magnificent new piece of fiction, so compellingly good that we have no choice but to open up a special 21-page space in the magazine and print it.

Hemingway's work is a 27,000-word novel called The Old Man and the Sea. It is the story of an old Cuban fisherman who, after nearly three months of bad luck, ventures miles out into the Gulf Stream alone and hooks a giant marlin, larger than any he has ever seen, larger even than his own boat. It is a story of struggle, of a great hunter against a great quarry, but through it Hemingway tells the much greater story of human endurance and dignity in the face of savage opposition from fate and nature.

In next week's issue, in time for you to read it during the last long weekend of the summer, LIFE will publish The Old Man and the Sea in its entirety, exactly as Ernest Hemingway wrote it, for the first time anywhere in the world. On Sept. 8 it will be published in book form by Charles Scribner's Sons, and it will be one half of the Book-of-the-Month Club's dual selection for September.

The Old Man and the Sea is full of wonderful excitement. It bursts out of Hemingway's letters to us (above) and fills the mind of everyone who has seen the manuscript. Some of you will be excited by the story itself, some by its meaning and some by the triumph of the writer. In any case few will disagree with Author James Michener (Tales of the South Pacific), who last week read a set of galley proofs and summed up his feeling so: "Old Man Hemingway has produced a masterpiece and won back the championship. He's still the pappy of us all."—THE EDITORS

*"... We moved out on the porch and hashed the ball game over ...
Jim still said he should have bunted
... Sally said he was right to swing at it ... then we all allowed the game was history
... that it was time to bring out the Schlitz."*

Schlitz is the beer that looks, acts, and tastes the way most Americans like beer.

Sprightly stand-up character, that comes from Schlitz know-how in handling the sensitive ingredients of beer.

That clean taste—that matchless flavor—that subtle tang that comes from just the kiss of the hops.

No wonder more people prefer (and buy) Schlitz than any other beer.

If you like beer you'll love Schlitz
